ADVERTISE MENT.

THE materials upon which the fol-Iowing Pamphlet is formed, were derived from the best and most incontestible authorities. The Author had access to original papers, accurate estimates, and authentic dispatches. He has also availed himself of the records of both Houses of Parliament; and he has made it his business to examine. with attention, fuch printed tracts as might contribute to throw any light on the subject. Upon the whole, more labour and time have been employed on this short disquisition, than are generally bestowed upon fugitive Publications of the same kind. The defign of the Writer has been to extricate the contest now subfisting between Great-Britain and her Colonies, from the errors of the ignorant, and the mifrepresentations of defigning men. As he has rigidly adhered to truth throughout, and to fuch arguments as naturally arise from undoubted facts, he trusts he has attained his object.

Since the Pamphlet was first published, some persons, eminent for their knowledge in the affairs and interests of Great-Britain and America, have communicated, through the the hands of the Bookseller, several important facts to the Author. These were chiefly delivered, after the fourth Edition had been sent to Press. To do more justice to the argument, as well as to shew his gratitude to his unknown friends, the Writer has been induced to revise, with attention, the whole subject. The communications of others have suggested some new facts to himself; and he, therefore, hopes, that he has rendered this Edition less unworthy, than any of the preceding, of the attention of the Public.

Dr. Price has corrected, in a late Edition of his Pamphlet, the errors fuggested in the Refutation, yet he still adheres to his conclusions. This circumstance has induced the Author to take some further notice of the Doctor's State of the National Debt, and to shew its fallacy on new grounds. His entering more deeply into that subject will depend on his Opponents. But it is to be supposed their declining credit will teach them more discretion.

they endeavour to impress the World with a favourable opinion of their own cause, and to lay the blame of hostilities on the injustice of their Opponents. But if Nations, accountable to none for their conduct, deem it necessary to reconcile others to their proceedings, the necessary is still more urgent with regard to those who, breaking through every political duty, draw their swords against the State of which they own themselves the Subjects. The opinions of mankind are invariably opposed to such men. Their assentiates are heard with distrust, their arguments weighed weighed with caution; and, therefore, it is as neceffary for THEM to adhere to truth, in the former, as it is prudent to avoid fophistry in the latter.

This confideration, however obvious it may appear to others, feems to have totally escaped the attention of the body of men who lately fat at Philadelphia under the name of "The General "American Congress." In a paper published under the title of " A DECLARATION by the Re-" presentatives of the United Colonies of North " America", the facts are either wilfully or ignorantly mifrepresented; and the arguments deduced from premises that have no foundation in truth. But, as whatever fails from men who call themfelves the Representatives of a People, must fall with some degree of weight on the minds of the undiscerning part of mankind; it becomes, in fome measure, necessary to examine briefly the reasons held forth by the Congress to justify the rebellion of their Constituents. On a subject so trite, arguments advanced by other Writers may fometimes recur; but novelty is less the object of this part of the disquisition, than perspicuity and precision.

The Declaration of the Congress begins with an involved period, which either contains no meaning, or a meaning not founded on the principles of reason. They seem to infinuate, that no body of men, in any Empire, can exercise " an " unbounded authority over others;" an opinion contrary to fact under every form of Government. No maxim in policy is more univerfally admitted, than that a supreme and uncontroulable power must exist somewhere in every State. This ultimate power, though justly dreaded and reprobated in the person of one MAN, is the first spring in every Political Society. The great difference, between the degrees of freedom in various Governments. confifts merely in the manner of placing this neceffary discretionary power. In the British Empire it is vested, where it is most safe, in King, Lords, and Commons, under the collective apar pellation of the Legislature. The Legislature is another name for the Constitution of the State; and, in fact, the State itself. The Americans still own themselves the subjects of the State; but if they refuse obedience to the laws of the Legislature, they play upon words, and are no longer Subjects, but Rebels. In vain have they affirmed that they are the Subjects of the King's prerogative, and not his Subjects in his legislative quality; as the King, with regard to his Subjects in general, is to be confidered only in his executive capacity as the great hereditary Magistrate, who carries into effect the laws of the Legislature, the only B 2 Sluo!

The discretionary and uncontroulable authority of the British Legislature being granted, their right to tax all the Subjects of the British Empire can never be denied. Some ill-informed reasoners in politics have lately started an obsolete maxim, which has been feized with avidity by the Americans, That "the Supreme Power cannot take " from any one any part of his property without " his consent;" or in other words, That Representation is inseparable from Taxation. The Colonists, fay they, have no Representatives in Parliament, and therefore Parliament has no right to tax the Colonists. Upon this principle, scarce one in twenty-five of the people of Great Britain is represented. Out of more than seven millions, fewer than three hundred thousand have an exclusive right to chuse Members of Parliament; and, therefore, more than three times the number of the Americans have an equal right with them to difpute the authority of the Legislature to subject them to taxes. The truth is, Representation never accompanied Taxation in any State. The Romans were a free nation; yet the Senate, that is, the great body of the Nobility, possessed the sole right of taxing the people. In this kingdom, the House

House of Commons have an exclusive right of modifying and regulating the quantity of public supplies, and the manner of laying taxes. They decide upon what the Legislature ought to receive for the support of the State: but the Commons, by their own authority, cannot enforce the raising the supplies they vote. That privilege is inherent in the supreme and unaccountable power vested in the three branches of the Legislature united; who are in fact the State, as the virtual Representatives of the whole Empire, and not the delegates of individuals.

rate, as has been already observed, have no

If representation is virtual in Great-Britain, why then is it not virtual in the Colonies? The people of the four Northern Provinces, though they deny the fact in words, own it in their conduct. Near one third of the Corporations in New-England chuse no Representatives to save the expence of paying their Deputies. They, however, own the right of their Assemblies to impose taxes, and to make laws to bind the whole community, as the Representatives of the whole Colony. The truth is, Representation has no more to do with the right of Taxation, than with every other right exercised by the Supreme and Superintending Power. It is interwoven with the very essence of the Legislative Power; and is exerted, by that Power, for the necessary support of the

they, and the manner of laving taxes. They decide

Why it has been fo generally received as a maxim, in this country, That Taxation and Representation are inseparable, requires to be further explained. Men little acquainted with the Constitution, derived the opinion from their finding, that it is the indisputable right of the Commons, that all grants of subsidies and parliamentary aids should originate in their House. But though they first bestow those subsidies and aids, their grants, as has been already observed, have no effect without the affent of the other two branches of the Legislature. The common reason given for this exclusive privilege is, That as the supplies are raifed upon the body of the people, the people only ought to have the right of taxing themselves. This argument would have been conclusive, if the Commons taxed none but those by whose suffrages they obtained their feats in Parliament. But it has appeared, that more than feven millions of people, besides the Peers, who are in possession of fo large a share of property in the kingdom, have no voice in the election of the Members who fit in the Lower House. The Commons, therefore, and their Constituents not being the only persons taxed, the former cannot possibly have the only right right of raising and modelling the supply, from the mere circumstance of Representation. But if they have it not from Representation, they must in fact derive it from the supreme and discretionary power, which is reposed in them, in conjunction with the two other branches of the Legislature. It appears, upon the whole, that Taxation is the result of the discretionary power which is placed in the hands of the Legislature, and exerted by them for the necessary support of the State. To this power the whole Empire must submit, and consequently no one of its subjects can claim any exemption.

The Counties Palatine of Chester, Durham, and Lancaster, were anciently in the same predicament with the Americans, on the article of Taxation. The Earl of Chester and the Bishop of Durham became, by prescription and immemorial custom, possessed of a kind of regal jurisdiction within their respective territories. A similar form of Government was established by King Edward III. in the County of Lancaster; which was created by that Prince in favour of Henry Plantagenet; whose heiress carried the same rights and privileges to John of Gant and his posterity. But though the SUBORDINATE SOVEREIGNS of these Counties could pardon treasons, murders and felonies; nies; though they appointed all Judges, nominated all Justices of the Peace; though all writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in that of the King; though all offences were faid to be done against Their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem Domini Regis; though, in short, they possessed exclusively the whole internal Government of their several Counties; their subjects (if the expression may be used) were always bound by the Acts and Statutes. of an Assembly, in which they had no Representatives. They were also "liable to all payments," rates, and subsidies, granted by the Parliament of England.

Those Counties (it must be confessed), like the Americans, considered their being excluded from having Representatives in an Assembly by which they were taxed, a grievance. Accordingly, the Town and County of Chester, as far back as the thirty-fifth of Henry VIII. petitioned the Legislature for the privilege of sending Members to Parliament; and their request was granted by an express Statute. The County and City of Durham made a fimilar application. and with the same success, in the twenty-fifth of Charles II *. Had the Americans, instead of flying to arms, submitted the same supposed grievance, in a peaceable and dutiful manner, to the Legislature, I can perceive no reason why their request should be refused. Had they, like the County and City of Chefter, represented, that " for lack of "Knights and Burgesses to represent them in the " High Court of Parliament, they had been often-" times TOUCHED and ORIEVED with Acts and "Statutes made within the faid Court, derogatory to their most ancient jurisdictions, liberties and " privileges, and prejudicial to their queetness, reft. " and peace;" this Country would, I am persuaded. have no objection to their being represented in her Parliament. mi siwishto nood syed bluow tedy

But the Colonies, though that circumstance is only infinuated in the Declaration, have uniformly affirmed, that granting the supremacy of Parliament should extend over the whole Empire, yet that they themselves have a right to exemption from Taxes, either by the concessions of the Legislature, or by charters from the King. It seems

d only meant to grant, what he had a folection as great in policy, as it is in mailtennaticks

incompatible with reason, fay they, that the Colos nies should have internal Legislatures of their own, possessing the authority of taxation, and that, notwithstanding, the British Parliament should retain its power of laying imposts. The first of these affertions is not founded in truth. The Charters neither give nor can give any exemption from Taxation, The abettors of American refiftance draw an argument, in favour of the Charters of other Colonies, from an expression in THAT granted in 1680, for Pennsylvania. The purport of the words is, that the inhabitants of that Prosince should pay " their proportion of fuch taxes as were then laid or should thereafter be faid on America, by the Parliament of England." This exception was introduced merely to express what would have been otherwise implied. That the King only meant to grant, what he had a power to grant, an exemption from any demands of his own. The truth is, though the King may give away by Charter a right that militates against himself, as hereditary Chief Magistrate, he cannot authorize, by any deed whatever, an exemption from the general laws of the State. In fuch a cafe. ONE of the THREE branches of the Legislature would usurp the power of the THREE UNITED; a folecisin as great in polity, as it is in mathematicks to affirm, that a part is greater than the whole.

It may be necessary, perhaps, to make an apology for entering fo minutely into the argument in fayour of the right of Taxation. The Americans themselves have deserted that ground. They speak no longer as subjects. They assume the language of rivals, and they act as enemies. The question between them and Great Britain (for it is no longer between them and Government) confifts of dependence or independence, connection or no connection, except on the footing of a Sovereign State. They have already arrogated to themselves all the functions of Sovereignty. They have formed a great deliberative Council. They have taken the whole executive power into their own hands. They have struck a new currency, raised armies, appointed generals; and that they have not chosen ANOTHER SOVEREIGN, must be ascribed more to their Republican principles, than to any remains of loyalty for their lawful Prince.

In this fituation of affairs and opinions, it is matter of little furprize, that men who deny the authority of the State, should load the Legislature with opprobrious epithets, The Congress accordingly stigmatize Parliament with various charges of tyranny, violence, and oppression. Passing from this strain of general scurrility, they enter into warm encomiums on the ancestors of their Consti-C2 tuents.

in their applause, as they had done before in their centure. They affirm, that the ancestors of the Colonists obtained the lands which they have transmitted to the present race, "without any charge to the country from which they removed." Their very enemies could not wish to meet them on more advantageous ground. The sums expended upon the various Provinces, since their first establishment, for their ordinary support, government, and protection, have been so enormous, that without the authority of incontestible vouchers, they could scarcely obtain credit."

But, even granting that the Colonists had obtained their lands without any charge to the Mother-country, were they capable of keeping those lands perity at Home, which has encouraged them, like parricides, to raise the dagger against her own breast?

The Congress, in the next paragraph of their Declaration, affect to reprobate the last Peace, though they have derived so many and so great advantages from that treaty. This country ought also to regret the stipulations which she made, contrary, as it appears, to her own interest, for the advantage and fecurity of America. To the cession of Canada and the extensive tract of fertile land to the fouthward of that Province, Great Britain is indebted for those annual emigrations, which deprive her of many inhabitants. It is not the Irish and Scots only, that have found their way to the West-The rage of emigration hath also extended ward. itself to England; and, within these two years, more than one veffel has failed with emigrants from Yorkshire. Should then the Colonies continue to enjoy the protection of the Mother Country, without contributing their quota toward her expences, why should we be surprized, if a majority of farmers should exchange lands for which they pay rent in Great Britain and Ireland, for freeholds on the banks of the Ohio? The foil and climate are unexceptionable; and this kingdom, at the expence of SEVENTY millions, and the lives of many thousands daidw ree But, on the other hand, had Canada remained in the hands of the French, the Colonies would have remained dutiful subjects. Their fears for themfelves, in that case, would have supplied the place of their pretended affection for this Nation. They would have spoken more sparingly of their own relources, as they might daily stand in need of our Their former incapacity of defending themselves would have always recurred to their minds, as long as the objects of their former terror should continue fo near their borders. But their habitual fears from France were, it leems, removed only to give room to their ingratitude to Great-Britain.

The effrontery with which the Congress reprobate the late Peace, is scarcely equal to their folly in applauding the Minister who had carried on the With peculiar inconsistency they affect to war. commence an æra of " Public Ruin," from Mr. Pitt's relignation in 1761; yet the whole "object of their wilhes" is to be placed on the fame footing as in the year 1763. They do not recollect, or rather they pretend to forget, that the most fplendid actions in the war happened after Mr. Pitt retired from his office. They are ignorant, or defignedly defignedly conceal, that the commerce of this kingdom has amazingly encreafed, and, in confequence, its revenue, fince the æra from which they date public ruin. They know, or they ought, from their own experience, to know, that notwithstanding their shutting their ports against our manufactures, permanent and profitable fources of commerce have been opened in other quarters; that instead of being distressed by their present interruption to trade, our Merchants find themselves incapable of fulfilling their commissions from foreign states; that as the furest test of the flourishing condition of commerce, the course of exchange, to the amount of feveral per cents. is univerfally in favour of Great-Britain; and that, as the ultimate and invincible proof of the public prosperity, the confidence of the people in the measures of Government, and their contempt for the rebellious efforts of the refractory Colonies, the national Stocks suffer neither fluctuation nor fall in the price.

Having represented the pretended ruin brought upon the British Empire by the late Peace, the Congress descend to the sictitious grievances of America since the same period. They affirm, that "the Colonies were judged to be in such a "state, as to present victories without bloodshed, "and

"and all the easy emoluments of statuteable "plunder." This figure of rhetoric, if it has any meaning, conveys one contrary to the truth. The Colonists having obtained such amazing advantages by a Peace, which they now reprobate, it was deemed just and proper by Mr. Grenville, then at the head of the Treasury, that they should bear a proportionable share of the national burdens incurred by the war. But as their prior inability to bear internal Taxes had precluded him from having a precedent, he only threw out, as it is sulgarly expressed, in the beginning of the year 1764, his intentions of raising a revenue in America by a Stamp-Duty similar to that established in Great-Britain; referring the confideration of the whole affair to the next Session. His object was, to give time to the Colonies to propose some other mode of Taxation, should that suggested to Parliament appear either improper or burdensome. During the whole of the summer 1764, though fome discontented spirits murmured, not a single doubt was started against the ABSOLUTE RIGHT of Parliament to impose Taxes on every Member of the British Empire. The time allowed to the Colonies furnished them with no expedient for railing a tax more fuitable to the purpose of a Revenue (which, by the bye, was to have been. fpent among themselves); and, therefore, in the beginning D 2 volov.

beginning of the year 1765, the famous Stamp-Act was passed, against a very inconsiderable Minority, in both Houses of Parliament.

In this Kingdom, as well as in every State possessed of freedom, there are always to be found factious persons, who oppose every measure of Government. In their eagerness to disgrace the Minifter, they too frequently obstruct the service, and defeat the interests of their Country. Every side of a speculative point is armed with arguments, that may impose on the ignorant, and encourage the fanguine. The Opposition in Parliament, in shorr, committed themselves too far in favour of the prejudices of the Americans, with regard to the Stamp-Act, to support it with vigour, when they themselves, very unexpectedly *, came into Office a few months after it had passed into Law. Though their view of the object changed with their elevation, they found that the flame which their own factious speeches, in the preceding Session, had raifed in America, was too vehement to be extinguished without either force or concessions. A natural timidity of difficien, joined to the common want of firmness which accompanies no-welty in Office, rendered them inclinable to purchase present quiet for themselves, at the expence of the future advantage of their Country. But still they wavered on the point of irresolution, till Mr. Pitt's oratory weighed down the scale. The Stamp Act was repealed; and from that moment may be dated "the commencement of" what the Americans call "an Æra of Public Ruin."

Great-Britain and her Colonies derive their prefent dispute, and its consequent misfortunes, from the PATRIOTISM of the motley Junto who formed the appearance of an Administration, in the end of 1765 and beginning of 1766. Virginia had the MERIT of taking the lead in the disturbances in America, which succeeded the passing of the Stamp-Act. It was in the Affembly of that Province, that the first Resolutions were voted against the authority of Parliament, in the first Seffion, after intelligence of the Act was received. Though the meeting was very thin, the Refolutions passed only by a majority of two votes; and they would have been most certainly rejected, had it not been for the absence of forty of the old Members. When the Assembly was adjourned for the feafon, the people in general were diffatisfied with the conduct of their reprefentatives. Every one expected, that, at the next next meeting, an attempt would be made to eraze the Resolutions from the Journals. But intelligence arrived, in the mean time, that the Marquis of Rockingham, Lord Camden, General Conway, and the rest of the "illustrious Band" who had opposed the Stamp-Act in Parliament, were, by a strange revolution in politics, received into favour, and raised to office; and that Mr. Pitt, then at variance with his wife's relations, was refolved to oppose their FAVOURITE MEASURE, the Stamp Act. The Virginians, deriving great hopes from this change, adhered to their Resolutions, and nothing further was done in the matter.

To enter minutely into the various motives of Mr. Pitt's oratory, for the total and absolute repeal of the Stamp-Act, would be to defert a great and public subject for the sake of tracing the private passions and interested views of an ambitious man, In his Argument, if what he advanced deserves the name, he fell in with the vulgar and, it may be faid, false maxim, That no profit ought to be expected from the Colonies, but That refulting from their Commerce. This opinion of Mr. Pitt, whether it proceeded from ignorance or defign (and it probably proceeded from both), has formed a popular error in former times, as well as in the prefent age. Many, who have pretended to understand perfectly the the affairs of this Kingdom, most firmly, but in my opinion very weakly, believed, that the great fecret of our political interest confisted in forcing, in a manner, a monopoly of foreign commerce. It was from this persuasion, that the popular Orator used, upon the occasion just mentioned, a figure of thetoric at once foolish and absord, when he affirmed, that the Colonists should be prohibited " from manu-" facturing even the hob-nail of a horse-shoe!" One might be tempted to ask the Orator, how this prohibitory mandate could be enforced; or if it could, whether it is less arbitrary, than to demand an internal tax from the Americans, for the fupport of their own government, and even for the general support of the State, and as a suitable return for the protection which they have ever derived from the Government of this kingdom?

The Congress had surely forgot this strange rhetorical figure of the great Orator, when they were tempted to date PUBLIC RUIN, from his refignation in 1761. They have also forgot, or they do not chuse to remember, that he acquiesced in the DECLARATORY BILL, brought in and passed by the Marquis of Rockingham's Party, who were in office, in the beginning of the year 1766. This Bill expressly declares, "that all his Majesty's Colo-" nies and Plantations in America have been, are,

" and of right ought to be, subordinate to and de"pendent upon the Imperial Crown and PARLIA"MENT OF GREAT BRITAIN; who have full
"power and authority to make laws and statutes
" of sufficient validity to bind the Colonies and Peo"ple of America, subjects of the Crown of Great "Britain, IN ALL CASES WHATSOEVER."

Mr. Pitt, to preserve some degree of consistency, objected to the words "IN ALL CASES WHAT-solver." But his opposition was so languid, that he did not attend the House when the Bill was passed; and only five Peers were found to follow his opinion, when it came under debate in the House of Lords.

"The Declaratory Act," as the American Congress affirms, "comprehends all the grievances of "which they complain." Yet that very Congress, with peculiar effrontery, not only approve, but even praise the conduct of the very Party by whom the Bill was introduced, and the MAN, by whose CRIMINAL ACQUIESCENCE (to use one of his own phrases) it passed into a law. That Party and That Man, being now in opposition to Government, the Americans endeavour to secure their support, by slattering their vanity at the expence of truth! They forget pass demerits in the hopes of present services. But when they expect to deceive a whole Party into their interest, they themselves are made the tools of that Party; and, like the figure of the Negro, near Temple bar, are turned round by the machine, which they pretend to move.

The Congress, in a strain of eloquent adulation, fpeaks with raptures of "that illustrious Band of " diftinguished Peers and Commoners," who now declaim, argue, and protest, in favour of their own Rebellion. It has appeared that the Act of which they most complain, was the manufacture of that very "illustrious Band," encouraged by the negative opposition made by the Earl of Chatham, whose advice the Band followed, as it soon after appeared, to their own political destruction. Befides, it was not under the Administration of the Earl of Chatham, in the years 1767 and 1768, though the Americans date their misfortunes from the refignation of Mr. Pitt in October 1761, that the Bills imposing internal duties, and consequently establishing internal Taxation in America, were passed into laws *? Did not the present Administration, whose measures the Congress affect to reprobate throughout, repeal all those Acts, except the duty on Tea +, to gratify the prejudices of the Americans, and, if possible, to re-establish tranquility in all the Provinces? With what colour of reason, therefore, can the Americans lay the blame either of their real or pretended grievances on the Noblemen and Gentlemen now in office; and yet approve of the conduct of those very persons who passed the Declaratory Act, and followed it with Bills of imposts raised in the Colonies?

In reprobating the Declaratory Act, the Congreis recur to their usual maxim, That Taxation and Representation are inseparable. Though it has been already shewn, that they are as much reprefented as twenty-four in twenty-five of the inhabitants of Great Britain; though it has been proved, that whole Provinces, not represented, had been for feveral ages subjected to imposts laid by the Legislature; though it shall, hereafter, appear that they themselves have been uniformly taxed by the British Parliament; this argument they hold forth as invincible, and found upon it their present relistance to the supremacy of the Parent-kingdom. In pursuing it injudiciously and too far, they actually discover the expediency, and even necesfity of that fupremacy, of which they fo loudly complain. The Parliament of Great-Britain, fay they, will certainly perceive, "that an American revenue, if not diverted from the oftenfible er purpofes for which it is raifed, will actu-" ally lighten their own burdens, in proportion " as they increase ours." But is it not equitable, is it not just, is it not necessary, that all the fubjects of the empire should bear, as equally as possible, the public burdens of the empire? Why should the Americans, who have so largely, so uniformly, and so effectually experienced the protection of Government, be the only persons exempted from paying their share of its expences? Is it either reasonable or suitable to the common usage of Nations, that those who desert their country should enjoy greater privileges than those that remain? The Americans having been spared during the infancy of their Colonies on account of their poverty, endeavour to establish into an inherent right what was actually an indulgence.

Though this indulgence has been a fource of error to the more ignorant part of the Americans, there are furely many among them who know, that Parliament hath been uniformly accustomed to extend its supremacy over all the Colonies. In matters of revenue, in commerce, in civil, in all judicial regulations; and, in short, with regard to the general constitution of their government, the Provinces of North-America, till taught otherwife by a disappointed Faction in this Kingdom, allowed, that the whole fabrick of their polity might be new modelled and reformed by the fuperintending power of Parliament. In fact, it has been to new-modelled and reformed, whenever abuses in the Administration of their Government, under their civil polity, or the general interest of the British Empire, made it necessary for Parliament to interpole its authority. Inflances of this interposition, in both cases, present themselves, in almost every volume of the Statutes, from the Restoration down to the present reign; yet the Americans falfely infinuate, that it was in the prefent reign the exercise of the authority of Parliament (except only in the regulation of trade) first commenced.

A brief recital of some of those instances may throw light on a subject, rendered obscure and perplexed by the prejudices of the ignorant, and the arts of designing men. To gain the ears of the Populace, by awakening their ancient jealousies, the Americans affect to ascribe the present system of measures to principles of Toryism, which, they presend, prevail in our Councils. But, unfortunately for this part of their plan of deception, it will appear, that most of the Acts which bind America in coercive regulations, were passed foon after the Revolution; in the reign of the very Prince, who brought about that great event. The Whio Ministers of King William (perceiving that the Colonies, even then, had entertained views of placing themselves on a ground of independence on Parliament) advised their Sovereign, and their advice now stands on record, to pursue measures, which, in their consequence, should effectually secure their thorough dependence on the Legislature of this Kingdom.

In consequence of the advice given by a WHIG Ministry to a King who had mounted the throne upon WHIG principles; and also upon the fullest evidence of the frauds and abuses committed in the Plantations, in violation of the Act of Navigation, the Act of the 7th and 8th of William III. " for preventing frauds, and regulating abuses, " in the Plantations" was passed. By that Act, a power was given to the Commissioners of the Treafury and Customs in England, " to establish ports, " and appoint Officers, in the Plantations; and "those Officers to have the same authority for " vifiting thips and goods, and entering houses " and warehouses, as was exercised by the same " Officers in England." All

All penalties and forfeitures were made recoverable in the Courts at Westminster, or in Courts of Admiralty in the Plantations; which Courts were then, for the first time, established throughout all America. In any action or suit concerning his Majesty's Duties, the offence might be laid in any precinct or division of the Plantations, where the same should be alledged to have been committed, at the discretion of the Officer or Informer. All laws, by-laws, usages and customs repugnant to any laws of Great Britain which relate to the Plantations, or mention the same, are declared "illegal, null, and void." Many other restrictions, too tedious to be mentioned, were at the same time enacted and imposed.

But it was not in matters of Trade ONLY, that Parliament, during the reign of King William, fuperintended and controuled the Colonies. The Colonists, it was found, had encouraged Pirates, in various places; and no justice could be obtained in Their Courts against offenders, whom they openly abetted. To remedy this shameful abuse, a remarkable Act was passed, in the 11th and 12th of William III. This Act abolished all jurisdiction in that case, in the Courts in the Plantations. With regard to America, it virtually repealed the Act of Henry VIII. by which Pirates were intitled to a trial by Jury. The whole power of trying piratical offences in the Colonies, was vefted in Commissioners appointed under the Great Seal of England, or Seal of the Admiralty. The mode of proceeding is fimilar to that in Courts Martial; and a majority of voices either acquits or condemns. The Commissioners were impowered to issue warrants, in any of the Colonies, for arrefting fuch Pirates, or their accessaries. They might, at difcretion, either try the criminals in America, or fend them to England to be tried. Should the Governors of any Charter or Proprietary Government refuse to affift the Commissioners; should any person in authority in the Colonies refuse to pay obedience to the Act; fuch refusal, in either case, was declared to be a forfeiture of the Charter.

An Act passed in the 10th and 11th year of the same reign, confines the advantage of the Fishery of Newsoundland to British ships sitted out from Great-Britain. The execution of the orders and regulations respecting that Fishery, was placed in the hands of the Admirals, in the respective harbours; that is to say, in the hands of the Master of the ship that should first arrive from Great-Britain. The decision in all questions of civil suit is vested in such Admirals, with appeal to the Commander of the King's ships. All criminal offences an marters of Trade oney, that are to be tried in any County of England, by the King's Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer and Goal delivery.

The opinions of this Nation concerning the Government of the Colonies, may be collected from the above Acts. The authority of Parliament to bind America, in all cases whatsoever, and whenever the general interest of the whole Empire required it, was never disputed; and it was often exerted to correct abuses, and to suppress the ideas of independence, which began, even then, to be cherished by the Colonies. The same principles and the same policy were carried down by Parliament through the three succeeding reigns of Queen Anne, and of George I. and George II.

Early in the first of those reigns, the grossest abuses were committed by the petty Legislatures in the Colonies, with respect to Coin. The interposition of Parliament became necessary to correct those abuses. An Act was passed in the 6th of Queen Anne, for that purpose, when the Councils of that Princess were guided by Whigs. By this Act the rates of Foreign Coin, in the Plantations, were ascertained; and a severe punishment was inflicted on those who should take them at higher higher rates. The American Trade was placed in the same reign under further restrictions, by Act of Parliament. Rice and Molasses were added to the list of enumerated commodities. In the reign of George I. Furs and Copper-ore of the Plantations were subjected to the same restrictions.

The British Parliament confined not to Acts their sense of the undoubted right they possessed of controuling the Colonies, in all cales whatfoever. In the Journals of both Houses, there are many Proceedings which furnish proofs of their undeviating adherence to the fame principles; In the year 1702, a Bill was brought into the House of Commons, for abolishing all the Charter and Proprietary Governments in America, and re-uniting them to the Crown. In 1705, the House of Lords came to several Resolutions on the subject of laws enacted in several of those Governments. They declared those laws to be repugnant to the laws of England, and destructive to the Constitution. This proceeding was likewise followed by a Bill for abolishing those Charters.

These Bills, it must be confessed, were not carried into laws. But they did not fail, through any doubt entertained by the Legislature against their propriety. They were lost through a change sanfed: in the san.

I me should take them in the lituation of those, who brought forward the measure. That the opinion of the Legislature continued the same on this subject, is evident; as the same proposition was again taken up in the year 1716; when a WHIO Ministry governed the Kingdom.

In the reign of George II. the inftances of the controuling authority of Parliament over the Colonies, are more numerous and striking. By an Act of the 2d of George II. Chap. 35. fevere prohibitions and penalties are imposed and inflicted on fuch persons as shall cut and destroy white Pinetrees, tho fuch Pines are growing within the limits of a Township already granted; and these penalties are directed to be fued for and recovered in the Courts of Admiralty. The Merchants of Great Britain having, in the 5th of the fame reign, preferred a Petition to Parliament, complaining of the difficulties they met with in the recovery of debts in the Plantations; an Act was passed, which subjected all real Estates in the Colonies to just debts and demands; and to be affets, in the fame manner as in England, for the satisfaction of debts due by Bond. The exportation of Hats from any of the Colonies, and even the conveyance of them by land from one Colony to another, is prohibited, hibited, under severe penalties, by an Act passed in the same Session.

In the year 1733 the Province of Maffachusett's Bay presented a Petition to the House of Commons, praying that they might be heard by Counfel on the subject of Grievances. The chief of these was, "That the Crown had restrained their "Governor, by instructions, in certain cases re-" lative to the iffue and disposal of Public Money, " and the emission of Paper-Bills of Credit." The Commons, having confidered the matter, came to a Resolution, "That the Petition was frivolous " and groundless, a high insult upon his Majesty's "Government, and tending to SHAKE OFF THE " DEPENDENCY of the faid Colony upon this Kingdom, to which in LAW and RIGHT THEY " OUGHT TO BE SUBJECT." Complaint having, at the same time, been made to the House, "That the Representatives of that Colony had " CENSURED a person for giving evidence, before ss a Committee of the House, in the case of a Bill st then depending in Parliament;" it was refolved, That the passing such censure was an AUDACIOUS " PROCEEDING, and a high violation of the priviss leges of the House." A Committee was ac. cordingly appointed to enquire who were the abettors of this unwarrantable proceeding.

F3

We may perceive, from the above circumstance, how jealous Parliament HAVE BEEN of their fupremacy and uncontroulable authority over the Colonies, Happy it would have been for the bulk of the Colonists, that this uncontroulable authority had still extended itself with vigour over America, on the article of Paper-money. At Rhode-Island, in the year 1763, a Dollar was worth eight pounds Paper-currency; yet when the emission took place, it was only worth fix shillings and eight pence. The consequence was, that Guardians and others, who had got possession of effects belonging to infants and orphans, being by law obliged to account for the nominal value only, appropriated to themselves the greatest part of the fortunes of their Wards, in consequence of the fall of the value of the Paper-currency. The case will certainly be the same, with regard to the Paper-currency of the General Congress, notwithstanding its boasted credit. It must fall in its value, whatever may be the iffue of the present Re-The exertion which they have made for emancipating the Colonies from the just supremacy of the Mother-country, has opened a gate for the entrance of public ruin; for while a Paper-currency prevails, America must ever be drained of filver and gold,

The House of Commons were no strangers to the ruinous consequences of an American Papercurrency, when they entered in the year 1740 into a consideration of "the abuses committed " in the Colonies, in respect to the emission of " Paper Bills of Credit," After a long examination, they came to various Resolutions. They resolved, "That the Act passed in the 6th of "Queen Anne, ascertaining the rates of Foreign "Coin in America, had not been duly observed. "That many indirect practices, in that respect, " had been introduced, contrary to the true in-" tent of the Act, That an Address should be " presented to his Majesty to require the Gover-" nors of his Colonies to take effectual measures " for the strict observance of the Act of the 6th " of Queen Anne, That another Address should " be presented, requesting his Majesty to iffue " his Royal Proclamation, to fettle and ascertain " the rates of foreign Gold Coins. That the " CREATING and iffuing Bills of Credit, in the Bri-" tish Colonies, by virtue of Acts of Affembly, " had frustrated the delign of the Act of the " 6th of Queen Anne. That an humble Address " of Thanks should be presented to his Majesty, " for the orders he has already given on that " head; and, That he should also be requested " to require and command the Governors of the " respective

" respective Provinces, not to give their assent to any Act, whereby Bills of Credit might be issued in lieu of Money."

These spirited Resolutions of the Commons checked, for some time, the abuses in the emission and circulation of Paper-Money. The New-England Governments, however, did not continue long to pay any regard to ROYAL Instructions, though supported and enforced by the authority of the House of Commons. The frauds committed awakened again the attention of Parliament. the 24th of George II. an Act was passed, " to " regulate and restrain Paper-bills of Credit in the "Four New-England Governments." The Governors of those Colonies were prohibited under pain of being removed from their Governments; and for ever rendered incapable of any public office or place of truft, from affenting to any Act, Order, or Vote, for the iffue of any Paper-bills of Credit; and all fuch Acts, Orders, or Votes, were declared to be, ipfo facto, null and void.

In the year 1741 the Colonies took up the idea of a LAND-BANK, which had proved so unsuccessful in England in the reign of King William. The "American Assemblies," it appeared to Parliament, "had presumed to publish a scheme for supplying a pretended want of a medium in trade, for setting up a Bank on land security, and to solicit subscriptions." To correct this evil, an Act was passed, in the 14th George II. to restrain and prevent such unwarrantable practices; and to extend to America, the penalties inflicted by a Statute of the 6th of George I. on persons guilty of such practices in these king-doms." They were also subjected, by the same Act, to the penalty and forfeiture ordained by the Statute of Provision and PREMUNIRE of the 16th of Richard II.

There are several other Statutes by which Parliament with equal force affert their authority over the Colonies. In some of these they carry this authority beyond the limits, with which they have hitherto circumscribed it in this Kingdom. In the 29th of George II. cap. 35. Officers of the Army are empowered to enlift, in the Colonies, apprentices and indented fervants. The persons fo enlifted were exempted from arrefts in civil actions, where the value of the action exceeds not ten pounds. To these striking instances of the controuling power of Parliament over the Colonies, may be added the Act of 23d of George II. cap. 29. By that Act, "every person erecting or working " any mill or other engine for flitting or rolling " iron, "iron, or any plating forge or furnace for making "fteel, is subjected to a penalty of 2001, to be "recovered in any of the Courts in Westminster-" Hall, or in the Court of Exchequer in Scot-" land."

The foregoing recital of Statutes binding the Colonies, prior to the present reign, of which the Congress so much complain, is sufficient to convince the dispassionate, that the controlling power of Parliament has been perpetually exerted, and never disputed. There is hardly any object of Legislation in which the laws of this Country have not bound America. The Congress, whilst they affect to disavow the supremacy of the British Legislature, acknowledge that supremacy, perhaps thro' inadvertence, in its utmost latitude. They own themselves the subjects of the King of Great-Britain; yet it was the British Legislature that placed his Majesty and his family on the Throne. Were the Colonies represented in the Parliament which limited the fuccession of the Crown to the House of Hanover, any more than they were in THAT which laid a paltry Duty on Tea in the Ports of America? His Majefty owes his Throne to the Laws of England; and, as King, he can have no subject that is not bound by that law.

Taxation has been purpofely omitted in the above detail. That article, as the great object of centest, ought to be separately stated. The several instances of the exercise of the power of Parliament, in that case, shall be, therefore, thrown into one point of view. The first instance of Taxation is the Act of the 12th of Charles II. for granting to the Crown a duty of Tonnage and Poundage. This Act is in point. It directs, that the duties abovementioned " shall be payable " upon commodities not only imported into the " realin of England, but also into the DOMI-" NIONS THEREUNTO BELONGING." The Colonies are here included in express words. It is true, indeed, that the Duties of Tonnage and Poundage were nor collected in America. The reason was, that the commerce of the Plantations was fo inconfiderable, that the revenue arising from it could not pay the expence of collection.

But whatever might have been the reason for Poundage in the Colonies, the Law was certainly understood to extend to America. In the year 1680, the Assembly of the Island of Jamaica refused " to raise levies for the support of Government." Upon this refusal, the Lords of the Council made a Minute " to confer with the " Judges "Judges upon the question: Whether the subsidies upon the Tonnage and Poundage upon goods that may by Law, or shall be directly carried to Jamaica, be not payable, according to Law, by his Majesty's subjects inhabiting that Island, or trading there, by virtue of the Acts of Tonnage and Poundage, or other Acts made in England?" Unfortunately it does not appear, whether the conference was ever held; or if it was actually held, what was the result.

doldw (barder

The 25th of Charles II. cap. 7. is the next Act that binds America, in point of Taxation. By that Act certain duties are made payable in the Plantations, upon fugar, tobacco, cottonwool, indigo, ginger, logwood, fuftic, and other dying woods, and cocoa-nuts exported to any other place, except England. These Duties continue to be paid to this day; yet the Congress in eir Letters to the People, and also in their Declaration, expresly say, " that till the present reign, "they have ever exercifed an exclusive right over "their own property." They were no strangers to the falsehood of this impudent affertion. But the duty of a penny per pound on tobacco, by the 25th of Charles II. was presented by King William to the College of William and Mary in Virginia.

ginia. The Virginians, they knew, would, by no means, relish the repeal of that Act; as the Royal Grant to the College comprehends the Tobacco exported from Maryland, as well as that shipped from Virginia.

In the 9th of Queen Anne, an Act was passed, imposing certain Duties on all prize-goods taken in America, and imported into any of the Colonies. These Duties were as follows: "All Eu"ropean goods (wine and brandy excepted) which "have been usually sent to the Plantations, are to pay there such Customs as are payable for the like goods imported into the Planta"tions from Great-Britain. Other goods taken as prizes shall be liable there to such Duties as were payable for the same, by any Act of "Assembly, in the said Plantations."

To these Acts, subjecting his Majesty's subjects in America to Taxes imposed by the British Parliament, several others may be added. The Act of the 9th of Queen Anne, for establishing a Post-office. The various Acts passed for levying and enforcing the collection of the duty of sixpence per month, out of Seamen's wages, for the support of Greenwich Hospital. All these Acts extend to America, They bind the Colonies as well as the Mother-Country. Their authority was never disputed; and the Taxes imposed by them have been uniformly raised. The Act of the 1st of George I. expresy mentions and appropriates certain Plantation-duties, and orders them to be paid into the Exchequer. The Act of the 2d of George II. cap. 7. is equally explicit and decisive in the words. It requires the payment of the Duties for Greenwich Hospital, "by seamen belonging to American ships, whe"ther employed upon the high seas, or in any port, harbour, bay or creek, withiny any of the Colonies."

It appears from this detail of facts, that the right of Parliament to bind the Colonies, in all cases whatsoever, is not a claim founded on mere theory: on the contrary, that the controuling power of the Legislature is warranted by constant usage, and uninterrupted practice: That the Declaratory Act, of which the Americans complain, contains no new, no assumed powers over the Plantations; and that there is scarce any channel of Legislation, through which the British Parliament has not exerted its supremacy, in as full and ample a manner as it has been exerted over the inhabitants of Great-Britain; and all this prior to the present reign, in which the Congress place the commencement of "PUBLIC RUIN." It

British Legislature to bind the Colonies in all cases whatever, is founded on long and immemorial usage, and uniform and uninterrupted practice. Upon the same principles stand the legal prerogatives of the Crown, the privileges of both Houses of Parliament, and the clearest and most incontestible rights of the three branches of the Legislature united.

The American Congress, with a partiality for themselves scarcely consistent with their design of gaining others, in the next paragraph of their Declaration, call the Acts, which were the con-SEQUENCE of the reliftance of their constituents, the CAUSE of their rebellion. In descending to particulars, their first complaint is stated against "the se extension of the jurisdiction of the Courts of "Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty beyond their " former limits;" by which, they alledge, " the " fubject is deprived of his inherent right of a " trial by Jury." This is mere declamation, addressed to the prejudices of the ignorant. In the Courts of Admiralty erected in the Colonies, all fuits between the King and the Subject, whether breaches of the Act of Navigation or questions of revenue, have always been determined without trial by Jury. The reason was, that no Court of Exchequer Exchequer was ever established in America. Even in England, for breaches of the laws of excise, land-tax, and other questions of revenue, there are no trials by Jury. The jurisdiction of the Courts of Admiralty in America, has been extended only to the cases just mentioned. In all criminal questions, commonly called the Pleas of the Crown, in all civil suits between subject and subject, the inhabitants of America have uniformly enjoyed the same mode of trial, and in similar Courts of common-law and equity, with the inhabitants of Great-Britain.

The Congress surely forget, or it is not confiftent with their defign to remember, that the alterations of which they complain were made at the request of the Americans themselves. The reasons assigned for this request were, that the Courts of Admiralty established formerly in the various Provinces, possessed so little dignity, on account of the dependence and poverty of the Judges, that justice was either facrificed to connexions, or biaffed by avarice. Befides that, Appeals to Great-Britain could be feldom made, on account of the expence and distance. To remedy this evil, the present establishment of Courts of Admiralty in America was formed. Four great Courts of Vice-Admiralty were erected. The Judges Judges were rendered independent by ample salaries. The line of appeal became short, easy, and obvious; and had the Americans been indulged, contrary to the course of the Admiralty in England, with the privilege of trial by Jury, the parties would be Judges.

ship vignomes confloor laniming The complaint of the Congress, with regard to the Bill for shutting the Port of Boston, is at once unjust and ridiculous. It is unjust, as it was the feditious conduct of the inhabitants that forced the Legislature into a measure of coercion: and ridiculous, as they themselves had it in their power to remove the grievance. The destruction of the East-India Company's tea is well known to have been the deliberate act of a great majority of the people of Boston. To obtain reparation by the common course of law was impossible. The number and influence of the offenders screened them effectually from justice. The leading and domineering power was in actual rebellion. They had refifted an Act of Parliament, by an armed force. It was a public crime, and the punishment ought to have been general. The Act for shutting the port was therefore a measure of coercion against avowed Rebels. The fatal error of Government was, that they were not considered throughout as such; and

and Administration, instead of deserving censure for severity, were highly reprehensible for their illtimed lenity; as, after the Bill was passed, they slept under it, as a peace-regulation.

In pursuance of the plan of tenderness and forbearance, which has been fatally lost on the Americans, the Bill for suspending the trade of Boston was rendered conditional. A door was lest open for an immediate reconciliation, should the Assembly of Massachusett's-Bay make a public grant, for repairing the damage sustained by a Company of Merchants, through a public outrage. Yet the Congress stigmatize with the name of injustice, a coercive Statute rendered absolutely necessary by the shameless depredations of the inhabitants of Boston; and which Statute they themselves had it in their power to terminate, in an instant, by doing an act of common justice.

But why should we expect common justice towards others, among a people who (with regard to the Tea-Act) have been manifestly unjust to themselves? It is of the Duty on Tea, the Americans principally complain; yet they submitted to a Duty of 71. per Ton, laid on Wines, the Session which immediately preceded the passing of the Tea-Act. The Duty on Tea was also submitted to in all the Provinces where that commodity had not been usually introduced by Smuggling. Bofton itself, and even Mr. John Hancock (now PRE-SIDENT of the Congress, but formerly a most notorious smuggler), originally made no objection to the Act. It was when the East-India Company, by adopting the plan of fending Tea to America in their own name, gave the finishing blow to Smuggling, that the inhabitants of Massachusett's-Bay determined to oppose the Duty. Prior to the Act for laying the THREE-PENCE Duty on Tea, payable in the Colonies, the Americans actually paid a shilling, together with the profit of the Merchant. Formerly all Tea exported to the Plantations went encumbered with a Shilling, paid by the East-India Company. In other words, the Duty was not drawn back on exportation; fo that, by the Act, the confumer is a gainer of a Shilling in every pound of Tea, if to the nine-pence duty we should add commission. infurance, freight, and profit. Smugglers found themselves incapable of carrying on their contraband commerce; and they inflamed an ignorant rabble, to serve their own interest, or to gratify their own revenge. a Liuty of.

H

With

With equal effrontery, and with still less reason, the Congress exclaim against the alteration made in the form of the government of Boston. With their usual fallacy in argument, the Americans with to establish it as a maxim in polity, That Charters granted by the CROWN, can neither be reverled nor altered by the LEGISLATURE. The Congress defignedly make no distinction between the power of the King, and the power of the Legislature. The King cannot revoke any Charter he grants, without the concurrence of the two other branches of the Legislature. But it has already appeared that the King can grant no Charter, which the three branches of the Legislature united cannot alter and annul. They might as well go at once to the whole supremacy; and save themselves the trouble of thus supporting a cause untenable on any other grounds. The three branches of the Legislature united make daily alterations in the Constitution of Great-Britain; and, if their Supremacy extends over the whole empire, they have the same right to alter the constitution of the American Colonies. If the Americans deny this polition, all argument is at an end; and they avow an independence, which, in THEIR circumstances, marks them out for enemies. The alterations under the circumstances existing at the time, were absolutely necessary. When the Constitution

Constitution was attacked, the Civil Magistrates tought to have been on the side of the Constitution, and not all named by the somenters of rebellion, who denied the authority of the Legislature. After all, this alteration of which the Congress affect to complain, is no more than putting the inhabitants of Massachuset's-Bay on the same footing with the other Colonies. They have received in miniature the counter-part of the constitution of the Mother-Kingdom; and have THEY a right, or can THEY wish to be more free than the freest nation in the world *?

The Act for regulating the Government of Quebec, furnishes the Congress with an ample field for declamation. To inveigh against Popery and arbitrary Power has been ever a favou-

Conft 1000

In some of the Colonies, Rhode-Island in particular, every Officer, from the Governor down to the Constable, is annually chosen. Such is the consustion and so violent are the animosities which attend this general election, that every sensible man in the province wished the Charter revoked, and a Form of Government established on the same footing with the Southern Colonies. The extension of the right of electing Magistrates to the people at large, was the principal cause of the fall of freedom in Old Rome. The prejudices and fears of the rabble were the steps by which ambitious men ascended to a power, which they converted into tyranny over their foolish Constituents. The vanity gratished by the right of election, was soon balanced by indignity and contempt; for the grandsons of the voters who placed Marius, Cinna, and Cæsar at the head of the State, were employed by Caligula in raising his horse to the Consulthip.

rite topic with men, who wish to profit by the prejudices of the people. Had the Congress attended to the general principles of the British Conflitution, they might have informed themfelves, that His Majesty, without the interposition of the two other branches of the Legislature, might have permitted the inhabitants of Canada to remain for ever under French laws. There is no maxim in the Law of England more generally known or less controverted than, That in conquered or ceded countries, which have already laws of their own, such laws remain in full force till they are altered and changed by the Sovereign. Had His Majesty, therefore, entertained fuch defigns as the Congress obliquely lay to his charge, why should he call in the aid of the Legislature to execute what was already done by the Common Law? The Congress will not, furely, affirm, that the fystem of government established by the Legislature in Quebec, is so arbitrary in itself, or so fit for the purposes of despotism, as the Constitution which subsisted in that Province under the French. Ought they not to confider, that no other form of government could have been established, so suitable to the disposition of the inhabitants, the tenures of their property, and the toleration of their religion, to all which they had an undoubted right, by the terms of their their Capitulation, and the articles of the subsequent Treaty of Peace?

The Opposition at home, as well as the Patriots abroad, have found an extensive subject for pathetic eloquence, in the form of Government now established by Law in Canada. The former have either very treacherous memories, or they change without any ceremony their opinions with their fituation. Under the Administration of the Earl of Chatham, Mr. Morgan, Lord Shelburne's Secretary, was fent privately to America, as Commissioner, to settle and regulate a new code for the Government of Quebec. The Governor and Chief Justice of that Province, if I am not mil taken, were joined with Morgan in this fecret. but important commission. The measure, it is said. was confidered by the Board of Trade; it was certainly debated, if not adopted by the Cabinet, as far back as the year 1767, during the plenitude of the Earl of Chatham's power, Lord Camden was Chancellor, and gave his fanction to regulations more allied to Despotism than those he reprobates at present. The Duke of Grafton, the Earl of Shelburne, General Conway, and feveral others of "that illustrious Band," on whose virtues the Americans expatiate with rapture, approved this POPISH, ARBITRARY, TYRANNICAL fystem fystem of Government*: yet all these are, now, true Americans, strenuous Protestants, Whigs of the ancient mould, determined affertors of freedom, avowed enemies to oppression, popery, and ARBITRARY POWER!

The Congress, with a pliance suitable to their defign, vary their language, according to the fupposed prejudices of those whom they wish to deceive. When they speak to the Opposition in Parliament, and the reftless spirits without doors in Great Britain, they declaim, with vehemence, against the Quebec-bill, as the means of establishing despotism in Government and errors in Religion. When they write to the Canadians, they affure them, "that religious and focial principles " are not incompatible; that the fate of the Pro-" testant and Catholic Colonies are strongly linked " together; that they fincerely wish to unite with " them in defence of common Liberty." Had the glaring inconfiftencies in these opposite professions of the Congress, remained a secret from the Publie in general, we might be induced to place them to the great account of American deceptions. But as they were printed by the very persons by whom they were made, we can scarcely ascribe this part of the conduct of the Congress to a better motive than political lunacy.

freedom, growed meanes to oppn ession, poppny,

The Congress enumerate, among their complaints against the British Legislature, the Refolution of Parliament to give its due force to an unrepealed Statute passed in the time of Henry VIII. It is declared in the Resolution, that upon this Statute, treasons and misprisions of treason committed in any of his Majesty's dominions beyond fea, subject to the Crown of Great-Britain. may be tried in England. Though this Refolution is confidered by the Congress as a part of the ideal system of enslavement, with which they charge the King and Parliament, it contains no novelty, no uncommon firetch of law. A thoufand inftances of the fame kind are upon record, long before the present disputes with America began. One inftance is extremely remarkable; I mean, the transactions in the Case of the Insurrection in Antigua, in the year 1711. All the proceedings were founded on the Act of Henry VIII. Some of the Infurgents were fent to England; they were tried upon that Statute; and that circumstance has established a precedent which cannot be controverted. But had even a new law of this kind been made, what reason could the American Congress have to complain? Have not the prejudices, insurrections, and even rebellion of their own countrymen totally interrupted the common course of justice over all the yast Continent which they inhabit; and shall the generality of the crime be admitted a competent excuse against punishment?

* class After these on the Upper Hunles, when The Americans owe this grievance, if in fact it defetyes the name, to that " illustrious band." whole former political dis have it feems, been oblicerated by other prefeat toppolition. The Declaratory Act the Tea-Bill and internal Taxation-were confessedly the work of the "illustri-"Ous band." One of their leaders (Lord Camden) was the author of the Refolutions of which the Congress fo loudly complain. He carried them, the Chancellor, to the King; and it was at his -Lordhip's mintigation which were improposed in Parliament; and fenerup in an Address from both Halleson His Majety. 1 . If, therefore, "tithe liberties of America" (to borrow an expression from one of her writers) " have received a mor-" tal ftab by these Resolutions," the dagger which inflicted the wound was in the hands of a FRIEND. This FRIEND, however, has not always been the friend of American independence and refistance. Mr. Pratt, when Attorney-General, advanced a doctrine very different from that adopted by Lord Camden, when diverted of the Great-Seal. Instead of erecting each petry Affembly in the Colonies into a branch of an Independent Legislature, he declared under his hand, "That care should be taken not to " admit the encroachments of the Provineial Assemblies on the Upper Houses, when they support such encroachments by argu-" ments drawn from the exercise of the like " rights in the British House of Commons. The " Constitutions of the two Affemblies differ run-"DAMENTALLY in many respects. Our House of Commons stands upon its own laws, the Lex " Parliamentaria. But the Assemblies in the Co-" lonies are regulated by their respective Charters, " Ufages, and the Common Law of England: and will never be allowed to ASSUME those pri-" vileges which the House of Commons are entitled to justily here, upon principles which " neither CAN nor MUST be applied to the Affem-" blies of the Colonies "."

[.] MS. opinion of Attorney-General Pratt, (now Lord Camden) extracted from the Archives of Maryland.

Equally firong in itself, and adverte to the claims of the Colonies, was the opinion of the fame man, with regard to the trade of Great-Britain with America. He was fatisfied, he faid, that " the Mother-Country would never endure " any impost laid by the American Assemblies on "her trade. The Provinces," continues Mr. Pratt, " might, by the fame rule, prohibit the "importation, as well as they might tax the "merchandize imported; and it feems to be a " very unwarrantable attempt to make the Eng-"lish importer of goods carried to America in " the way of trade, pay a tax for the defence of " any of the Provinces, for no other confideraction but the liberty of trading there, to which "Great-Britain has an ORIGINAL RIGHT, which cannot be invaded, or even regulated, by any " thing the Colonies can do."

But to return to the Act of Henry VIII. The passions of the Congress have essaced, in this instance, as well as in many others, that shew of reason which they wish to hold forth to the world. They complain of the exertion of our Acts of the Legislature; yet it is undeniably certain, that, in their Courts of Law, it has been a standing rule, that all Acts of Parliament of a general general nature, prior to the respective establishment of the different Colonies, are binding upon the Inhabitants. It was also a standing rule, that all subsequent Acts, which expressly comprehended any of the Colonies by name, shouldbind fuch Colony, though contrary to Acts of Affembly. The Americans, in general, before the commencement of the present troubles, would have reprobated the idea of their not being entitled to the benefit of all general Acts of Parliament, for the good of the People. Why therefore, should they claim an exemption from a general Act, which enforces the obedience of the People to the Sovereign Power? Obedience and protection are reciprocal duties. If they deny obedience to the Acts of the British Legislature, what claim have they to rights under the British Government?

From condemning the Acts of the Legislature, the Congress pass to complaints against their Sovereign, as well as his principal servants. They alledge, that the "Americans have incess fantly and inessectually belieged the Throne "for ten years;" yet conceal the reason, which was, That their demands, rather than requests, were such as the Sovereign could not grant, confishent confitution. They complain, that fleets and armies have been fent to their country, to enforce the coercive laws enacted by the Legislature, for the establishment of its supremacy; yet they pass over in silence the outrages committed by themselves, which rendered that measure needs fary. Did they not draw the sword with one hand, when the other was stretched forth with Petitions for relief from pretended grievances in Did they not purchase arms, ammunition, and artislery, form magazines, enlist soldiers, and prepare in every respect for rebellion and war, when they affected to speak the language of submission and peace to see the language of submission and peace the see the

All these are facts that cannot be controverted.

The Congress know the truth, but pursue their plan of deception. "They hoped in vain," they say, "for moderation in their enemies," yet their own conduct has been one continued series of violence, oppression, and injustice. Having disclaimed their allegiance to the Sovereign, disobeyed the Acts of the Legislature, destroyed the property, and insulted the persons of the servants of the State; assumed the sunctions of sovereignty, and rushed into actual rebellion; they complain of a want of moderation in Government, for exerting tion, for reffering tranquillity, enforcing legal fabruillion to the laws of the State, and for protecting the linjured, and punishing the guilty.

Throughout the whole of their strange Declaration, the American Congress appear to adapt their reasonings to the weakness of the prejudiced, and their facts to the credulity of the ignorant. They affirm, that they have uniformly endeavoured to procure an accommodation with the Mother-Country; yet they reprobate the Refordtion of the Commons, on the 20th of February, which opened a fair channel for agreement. They call the Resolution " an insidious manœuvre, " calculated to divide the Americans, and to esta-" blish a perpetual auction of taxation, where "Colony should bid against Colony, all of them " uninformed what ranfom should redeem their " lives; and thus to extore from them, at the " point of the bayonet, the unknown fums that " should be sufficient to gratify, if possible to " gratify, Ministerial rapacity, with the miserable " indulgence left them of raising, in their own " mode, the prescribed tribute! We may learn, from this tedious and involved fentence. how much the Congress have profited by the Speeches of Patriotism in the British Parliament. A noted Orator, Orator, who has been suspected of having period the DECLARATORY BILL, (which, the Congress alledge, contains the whole mass of American grievances) used almost the same words in the House of Commons, on the day the Resolution came under debate. But former demerits have been forgot, in what the American Demagogues solutily construe into present services.

To thew the nature of the Proposition which the Congress Rigmatize with the name of an " in-"fidious mantenvie," fome previous facts must be explained. On the lecond of February, a Motion was made in the House of Commons, for an Address to his Majesty, which was foon after prefented, with the concurrence of the Lords. In this Address, the two Houses having stated Tome facts, were induced to declare, that a rebellion actually existed at that time in the Province of Maffachufett's-bay: That this conduct was the more linex cutable, when it was confidered with how much temper his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament had acted, in support of the Laws and Constitution of Great-Britain: That they were resolved never so far to defert the trult reposed in them, as to relinquish ANY PART of the Sovereion Authority over ALL bis Majesty's Dominions, which the law invested in his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament: That the conduct of the Americans was fufficient to convince them of the necessity of this supremacy and power: That, however, they had always been, and always should be ready to pay attention and regard to any real grievances, which should be laid before them in a DUTIFUL and CONSTITUTIONAL manner: That they requested his Majesty to take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the Supreme Legislature: And that they were resolved, at the hazard of their lives and fortunes, to support his Ma2 jefty against all rebellious attempts, in the main tenance of the just rights of his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament.

In this Address the two Houses of Parliament; while they held forth the Sword in one hand, evidently tendered the Olive-branch with the other. The Americans themselves were made the arbiters of their own fate. The choice of war or peace was left in their own hands. But as the offer of Parliament to listen to the real grievances of the Colonists was deemed too general to form a foundation for an agreement between them and the Mother-Country; the Minister, wishing to conciliate bly of fresh Fray free or Cology and all fruit conciliate matters with America, even contrary to the opinion of many Friends to this Country, laid before the House of Commons fome EXPLICIT PROPOSITIONS, which might answer that end. Accordingly, on the twentieth of February, the following Propositions were introduced to a Committee of the whole House, by the Chancellor of the Exchequer: " That it is the opinion of "this Committee, that when the Governor, " Council, and Assembly, or General Court of his "Majesty's Provinces or Colonies shall propose to " make provision according to their respective " conditions, circumstances, and situations, for " contributing their proportion to the common " défence; fuch proportion to be raifed under the " authorities of the General Court or General Af-" fembly of fuch Province or Colony, and dispos-" able by Parliament; and shall engage to make " provision also for the support of the Civil Go-" vernment, and the administration of justice " in fuch Province or Colony; it will be pro-" per, if fuch proposal shall be approved by his "Majesty in Parliament, and for so long as such " provision shall be made accordingly, to forbear " in respect of such Province or Colony, to levy "any duties, tax, or affessment, or to impose " any further duty, tax, or affeffment, except " only

"only such duties as it may be expedient to im"pose for the regulation of Commere; the nett

"produce of the duties last mentioned, to be car"ried to the account of such Province, Colony,
"or Plantation respectively."

ing Propositions were introduced to a Corno.

This Resolution, which was carried by a great majority, plainly marked the ground for a negotiation, and an equitable agreement with the Colonies. It was moderate, comprehensive, and explicit. It named the persons from whom the proposals must come, and those to whom they were to be made. The end and purpose of the Contribution were explained. The appropriation of the expected revenue was specified, and precluded every fuspicion of its being misapplied. Though the offer was conditional, it was plainly conclusive, as long as the Americans themselves should adhere to the agreement. They had it in their power to tax themselves, the great point for which they professed to contend; and the only right referved by the Legislature was, to determine the QUANTUM of the supply; and they alone can determine it, as being the supreme power, who are the fole judges of what is neceffary to support the State. The Proposition, upon the whole, was AT LEAST as favourable to the pretentions of the Americans, as to the claims of the Mother-Country. The former, therefore, must have accepted the proposal, had what they held forth to the Public formed the real principles of their opposition.

The Minority in Parliament, who deemed nothing fo fatal to their own views, as an agreement with the Americans, upon equitable, and confequently permanent terms, opposed this Proposition as infidious in its nature, and for that purpose rendered obscure and perplexed in its language. The American Demagogues, whose influence can only exist in the midst of anarchy and confusion, opposed it with similar views. The latter, indeed, have approved fo much of the sentiments, or rather professions of the former, that they have, in their Declaration, echoed back their very words in Parliament. The argument before went only to the claim of the Americans to be permitted, in their Assemblies, to settle the mode of Taxation. They then demanded an exclusive privilege of fixing the amount or quantum of the fupply; and now they give no fupply at all. But if neither the mode nor the QUANTUM is to be left in the power of Parliament, what power has Parliament left, with regard to the taxing of the Americans? Ought the BRITISH LEGISLATURE to lay HUMBLY the the wants of the Public before the PETTY LE-GISLATURES of America, and request their aid for the general Support of Government? What would this be, but the total emancipation of the Colonies from that supremacy for which we contend?

But a total emancipation has been all along the object of those Demagogues, who wish to erect their own usurped authority on the ruins of all legal Government. The Refolutions of the 20th of February had, at first, a fair hearing in America; they were accidentally carried over and printed at least two weeks before the USUAL PRI-VATE LETTERS, PATRIOTIC SPEECHES in Parliament, and secret instructions of the " illuf-" trious Band" arrived. During this interval, the general cry was, that every thing they had contended for was granted. The leaders were confounded; but when the private letters, fecret instructions, and patriotic speeches, came, the face of affairs was instantly changed. The Resolutions were reprinted with an inflammatory Preface. The spirit of the Demagogues returned. They inculcated with vehemence, that the Refolutions were infidious; that Taxation was not relinquished by Parliament; and that the just authority of the Assemblies was annihilated, as they had no longer the power either of judging of the propriety of the K 2 fervice, fervice, or of determining the quantum of the fupply.

The Americans formerly declared themselves willing to contribute to the exigencies and expences of the State, provided the demand should come by requisition from the King, and not by an immediate exertion of Parliamentary authority. This offer his Majesty declined, with that patriotism which has uniformly marked his own meafures, during his reign. Anxious for the happiness of ALL his subjects, he chose to be the Monarch of one great and free nation, rather than the Sovereign of a number of petty States, weakened by their own disunion. Had his Majesty been actuated by those motives of ambition, which are not uncommon among Princes, he would have eagerly closed with the offers of the Americans. Instead of making himself dependent, for the maintenance of his dignity, upon the grants of ONE Affembly, he might have extricated himfelf from even the fear of pecuniary difficulties, by a proger management of many Assemblies. The Representatives of one Province might be gratified into the views of the Crown, from the revenue of another; British Members might receive the wages of corruption in America; and American American Representatives be sent for the price of their votes to this Kingdom.

But fucceeding events have demonstrated, that the Americans were not fincere, in any one of their declarations, in favour of an amicable accom-The Propositions voted on the 20th modation. of February, came up to their own former demands; yet they evaded them, by treating them as infidious. The truth is, they knew their own demerits towards this Country, and they could not believe, that propofals so highly favourable could have been, on her part, fincere. One good, however, has resulted from the Propositions. The Colonies, by rejecting them, have left no doubt remaining concerning their real intentions. They confine no longer their claims to the exclufive privilege of taxing themselves. They aim, evidently, at a total independence in all matters whatfoever; and more particularly with regard to the Act of Navigation. They have long made fecret but most dangerous encroachments on this PALLADIUM of our Commerce. They now publickly avow their resolution to pay no regard to any Parliamentary restrictions, whether ancient or recent, on THEIR Commerce. They now openly trade all over Europe; and the obtaining the privilege, which they have, at length, usurped, has been the primary cause of their resistance to Parliament. The manufacturers and merchants of this Country have been long no strangers to this American policy; yet the Congress have the effrontery to expect, that the mercantile interest of Great Britain will espouse their cause.

The American Congress having in a loose, curfory, and superficial manner advanced some pretended arguments to justify their rebellion, defeend to the misrepresentation of facts, with the fame design. They affirm, "That General Gage, "who had occupied Boston as a garrison, sent " out a large detachment of his army, on the 19th " of April, who made an unprovoked affault on "the inhabitants of the Province of Boston, "at Lexington." On this allegation of the Congress it may be remarked, That the rebellious conduct of the Town of Boston, where all the authority of legal government had been long extinguished by the tyranny of a rabble instigated by factious leaders, had rendered a force necessary in that place, to reftore order and tranquillity, to protect the innocent, and to restrain the excesses of the turbulent and guilty: That the military preparations made in all parts of the Province, and especially at the Town of Concord, with the avowed intention of oppofing all legal authority, authority, induced and even forced General Gags (though fatally too late) to fend out a detachment of the troops under his command, to prevent hostilities, by seizing the means of carrying them on: That some of the Inhabitants of the Province, in "warlike array," stood in the way of this detachment, with arms in their hands; and, That when ordered to remove in a peaceable manner, they made "an unprovoked assault" on his Majesty's troops, by firing first upon them, and killing some, and wounding many.

The audacity of the Congress, in afferting FALSEHOODS, demands a brief detail of the TRUTH. General Gage, having been informed that arms, ammunition, cannon, and other implements of war, had been collected in the town of Concord. ordered a detachment of the Army to march with all possible secrecy to that place. He gave orders to the detachment, to observe the most ftrict discipline, and to resent no insults offered them by the country people, except actual hostilities. The General's orders were, in truth, too implicitly observed. There was not one LOADED MUSQUET in the whole detachment, except those in the hands of FIFTY Marines, who formed the van, when they were FIRED upon, by the country people, at Lexington. The affidavits of the rebels.

rebels, on this subject, are impositions and perjuries. There is not a man, whether officer or soldier, in the whole detachment, consisting of 800 men, but is ready, in the most solemn manner, to attest the truth of this fact.

It were to be wished, for the honour of the infurgents, that their BARBAROUS CRUELTY to the wounded foldiers, were more problematical than their firing FIRST on the King's troops. diers who fell by the first fire of the rebels, were found scalped, when the detachment returned from Concord to Lexington Bridge. Two foldiers who lay wounded on the field, and had been scalped by the favage Provincials, were still breathing. They appeared, by the traces of blood, to have rolled in the agonies of this horrid species of death, feveral yards from the place where they had been scalped. Near these unfortunate men, another dreadful object presented itself. A foldier who had been flightly wounded, appeared with his eyes torn out of their fockets, by the barbarous mode of googing, a word and practice peculiar to the Americans. Humanity forbids us to dwell longer on this scene of horror. The rebels, to break the force of accusation, began to recriminate. They laid feveral instances of wanton cruelty to the charge of the troops; yet nothing is better better ascertained, than that not one of the soldiers ever quitted the road, either upon their march or return from Concord.

The Congress stigmatize the expedition to Lexington and Concord, with the epithets of " an "unprovoked and wanton affault." collecting warlike implements at Concord, raising men throughout the Province, disciplining troops in every diffrict, forming magazines, purchasing ammunition, and preparing arms, no provocation? Were not the whole Country affembled before they knew of this expedition? And was not their being so completely provided with the means of repelling hostilities, a sufficient proof, that they had previously resolved to commence them? Could TEN THOUSAND men, the number that attacked (though at a PRUDENT distance) the troops on their retreat, have been collected by accident, or called together by a fudden alarm? Are not the Congress conscious to themselves, and was not General Gage fufficiently apprized, that the people of Massachuset's-Bay had determined to begin hostilities, had the expedition to Concord never happened? The truth is, the march of the troops had only haftened the execution of the plan of rebellion fettled before in the fecret Councils of the Provincial Congress.

The affertions of the Congress concerning transactions within the town of Boston, are as utterly devoid of truth as their account of what happened in the country. The hostile intentions of those with-IN, were as apparent as the rebellion of their brethren without was certain. The great law of felf-defence must therefore have justified General Gage for having deprived the former of arms, which they almost avowedly intended to raife against all legal authority. After the skirmish at Lexington and Concord, all supplies from the country were cut off from the town of Boston. Many of the inhabitants defired to remove, with their effects. Their request was granted; but it was at the fame time demanded, that they should deliver up their arms. This was, at first, approved by all; but great clamours foon after followed. Such of the inhabitants as were well affected, or pretended to be well affected to Government, alledged, that none but the ill inclined shewed any defire of removing; and that when they should become fafe with their effects, the town would be fet on fire. A great demur having also arisen about the meaning of the word EFFECTS, whether MERCHANDISE was included; and the General being likewife fensible, that the permitting articles of that kind to be carried to the rebels, might strengthen them in their resistance; he retained tained the goods. But they are still safely kept for the owners, should they either continue faithful, or seize his Majesty's mercy, and return to their duty.

The next paragraph of the Declaration, as it is not supported by truth, is addressed to the pasfions. The Congress complain, with an attempt at the pathos, " of the separation of wives " from their husbands, children from their pa-" rents, and the aged and fick from their rela-" tions and friends." But is it not notorious to the whole world, that this SEPARATION, which the Congress affect to lament, was the necesfary consequence of the rebellion of their countrymen? Did they not furround the town of Boston, with an armed force, with the avowed intention of destroying his Majesty's forces, Generals, and Governor? And were the gates to be left open " to let ruin enter," as one of their own writers expresses himfelf? Have the people of Boston suffered more hardships than the inhabitants of befieged towns usually suffer? Have they not even suffered fewer restraints than men in their fituation had reason to expect? Was not Dr. Warren, the Chairman of the Provincial Congress, a notorious abettor of the infurrection, a nominal General in a rebel army, permitted to come into Boston, under pretence of visiting a sick friend, on the day preceding the action on Bunker's-hill, where he was killed in arms against his King and Country? Is this a mark of those cruel restraints, those melancholy separations, of which the Congress complain? But THEIR business is to engage the passions, where they can make no impression with their arguments.

In the next paragraph of their Declaration, the Congress, with their usual want of impartiality and fairness, affert that "the GENERAL, emulat-" ing his ministerial masters, by a Proclamation, " bearing date the 12th of June last, after vent-" ing the groffest falshoods and calumnies against "the good people of THESE COLONIES, proceeds " to declare THEM ALL, either by name or descrip-"tion, to be rebels and traitors; to superfede the " use of the Common Law, and instead thereof " to publish and order the use of the Law Martial." Men who accuse others of falshood and of calumny, should carefully abstain from misrepresentation and flander themselves. The Proclamation was not iffued by General Gage, as Military Commander in Chief in America, but officially as Civil Governor of Massachusett's-Bay; and as such he was authorized to iffue it, by the Charter and Laws of the Province.

All thefe things

The Proclamation of the 12th of June appears on the face of it to relate to the affairs and inhabitants of Massachusett's-Bay only. To keep up the spirit of delusion which has ruined America. the Congress represent the Proclamation as declaring the inhabitants of ALL the Colonies, rebels and traitors, and as extending the Law Martial to every Province. But did he declare even the inhabitants of Massachusett's-Bay rebels, till they had attacked his Majesty's troops, seized his forts and garrisons, belieged his army in the capital of the Province, and not only interrupted the common course of justice, but even totally annihilated all legal authority? It is with peculiar effrontery. that the Congress number the suspension of the common course of justice among their grievances, after all law and order had been trodden under foot by their own countrymen,

With the same degree of arrogant folly the Congress complain, that "their countrymen were "killed on Bunker's-hill, that Charles-town was "burnt to the ground, that their ships and vessels "have been seized, that their supplies of provisions have been intercepted, that General Carle-"ton is instigating the Canadians and Indians "against them, and that domestic enemies are "encouraged to attack them." All these things may may certainly have happened; but have they not happened in confequence of their own rebellion? Have they a right to attack others, and have others no right to defend themselves? Do the inhabitants of Massachusett's-Bay think, that as they have broken through all the ties that bind the subject to the Sovereign, the law of nature and of nations ought also to be suspended to gratify their ambition, to flatter their folly, to favour their extravagant schemes of independence? To the above imaginary catalogue of American grievances, may be opposed the just complaints of Great-Britain. Have not the rebels carried their hostilities to every corner against the Parent-State, that first gave them existence, and reared them to prosperity? Have they not attacked her troops at Lexington and at Concord, fired upon Boston, burnt the Light-house, taken Ticonderago and Crown Point, and even penetrated into Canada? And have they not used every artifice to instigate the Savages to make war on their Sovereign and Mother-Country? Almost all these injuries preceded the just exertions of this Kingdom to punish their rebellion.

The conclusion of the Declaration, though laboured, contains nothing but empty declamation, and therefore merits little notice. The fame dif-

regard to truth, or, rather, the same attention to mifrepresentation, which distinguishes the rest of that strange composition, is carried down to the end. They alledge, " that they are reduced to " the alternative of chufing an unconditional " fubmission to tyranny, or resistance by force." The Congress furely forget, or it fuits THEIR purpose to pass over in silence, the favourable (perhaps too favourable) conditions offered to them, by the Refolution of the Commons, in the month of February last. The terms couched in that Resolution were so obviously advantageous to America, that the Opposition in Parliament declared them insipious; or, in other words, " too good to " be fincere." An amicable fettlement had ceased to have been an object with the Demagogues ABROAD; and it would have ruined the schemes of the Faction at HOME. The FORMER derived their influence, consequence, and power, from anarchy THEY could exist only in a and confusion. ftorm; the reftoration of peace and tranquility must have reduced THEM to their original infignificance; and as for the LATTER, rendered desperate by disappointed ambition, they would not hesitate to ruin their Country, to procure the fall of their

· Such being the state of opinions among the leaders of Faction on both fides of the Atlantic. " refiftance by force became naturally the choice " of the Congress." To deceive an unhappy people, over whose minds they had established a temporary dominion, they boaft of "their perfect " union, and their great INTERNAL resources; " and that foreign affiftance is attainable." As to the first, we have no great reason to give it implicit faith. The Demon of Discord had appeared in some of the Provinces before he was conjured up by the Congress throughout the Continent. Governor Tryon had been obliged to raife 1200 men toquell aninfurrection in North-Carolina; Virginia and Pennfylvania were upon the point of quarrelling about their boundaries. At this very moment the Congress, who boast of American unanimity, are forced to interpose their authority, to prevent a rupture between Connecticut and Pennsylvania on the same subject.

The shew of unanimity which now subsists in America, appears from undoubted information to be the result of sear, more than any love for the desperate cause of the rebels. Force, fraud, and violence over the minds, persons and properties of His Majesty's subjects, have been found necessary for carrying on every measure of the Congress.

Men of property are, from interest, enemies to confusion; and the intelligent, foreseeing the inevitable issue of hostilities against the invincible power of a mighty Empire, are averse to a contest, that, on the side of the Americans, must terminate in ruin. But both are terrified into silence by the tyranny of a missed rabble; or their STILL VOICE is drowned in the clamours of Faction and tumult of Party.

The INTERNAL RESOURCES of the Americans are as problematical, as their unanimity in rebellion. Confift these mighty resources in a wretched Paper-currency*, established on no ostensible M fund

^{*} These Paper-Resources have been very liberally exerted by the Colonists, in the course of the year 1775. By the most authentic accounts the Congress and the Provincial Conventions have raised the sums annexed to each, respectively, in the following state, by issuing Paper-bills, to support their rebellion against the legal authority of Great-Britain.

fund of credit; and voted by an illegal Assembly, whose authority is feeble, on account of its novelty, and transitory, as it arises from temporary prejudices? Should force, or even folly, stamp a domestic value on the paste-board dollars of the Congress, what foreign nation will receive them for its manufactures and commodities? Are the Americans themselves capable of furnishing all the great implements necessary for the prosecution of war? Can they supply their armies with tents, with powder, with cannon, or with musquets? Is any one of these articles manufactured in a sufficient quantity in America? And how can they be procured in Europe, with the wretched currency of the General Congress?

The Colonists, had not reason been warped by prejudice in every part of their conduct, might have foreseen, that their commencing a war deprived them instantly of the resources for carrying it on. Their whole Coast is lined, it is to be hoped, at this very moment, with our ships of war, to put a total stop to their Commerce. They have, there-

I have not been able to obtain any authentic intelligence concerning the sums raised in the other Colonies. I may venture, however, to affirm, that the rebellious Provinces have raised, in the course of this year, a sum equal to the amount of their whole taxes (Provincial as well as Parliamentary) in TEN YEARS.

fore, lost at one stroke their whole trade in Corn and Rice with Spain, Portugal, and the Mediterranean; which, at a moderate computation, brought annually One Million Five Hundred Thousand Pounds to North America. They have lost the supplying our own West-India Islands, as well as those of other nations, with provisions; a branch of Commerce estimated little short of a Million annually. They have lost their Fishery, an article too great for computation; and they have lost the exportation to Great-Britain of commodities which would not have answered in any other market, had the sea remained open to their Navigation.

But if the Americans have little reason to depend on DOMESTIC RESOURCES, they have still less to hope from FOREIGN AID. Will France, in the present state of her sinances, involve herself in a ruinous and expensive war, to gratify the revenge of a Faction in this Country, or to favour the ambition of Demagogues beyond the Atlantic? Will Spain give her assistance to raise an INDEPENDENT EMPIRE in America? Will she encourage her own American subjects to rise against her authority, by abetting the rebellion of the American subjects of Great-Britain? Can either Branch of the House of Bourbon be so blind to its own M 2 interest, interest, as to wish to see a Sovereign State erected so near its settlements, which, from their proximity, their produce, and their wealth, must, in such a case, become objects of invasion, depredation, and conquest? What has either France or Spain to sear from this kingdom, whose interest consists solely in preserving what she has already acquired? But have not both every thing to sear, should a new Sovereignty start up in America, in which a want of resources would, in some degree, justify the providing itself at the expence of wealthy neighbours?

Having endeavoured to terrify Great-Britain with their DOMESTIC refources and FOREIGN aids; the Congress thinking, perhaps, they had gone too far, conclude with affurances, that "they have " not yet determined to diffolve their union with " the Mother-Country." But that union, it appears from the fequel, must not be construed into SUBORDINATION, on the part of the Americans. The general fupremacy of the Legislature, which by pervading the whole British Empire renders it one State, must not, it seems, cross the Atlantic, but in fuch proportions as may fuit the inclinations of the Congress. "They have taken " up arms," as they openly avow, " against that "Supremacy;" and "THEY will not lay them " down "down till hostilities shall cease on the part of Great-Britain." This is the Ultimatum offered by the Congress: Withdraw your armies, recal your fleets, and you may have peace from the Americans; for, as "they fight not for conquest," they do not yet mean to transfer hostilities into the heart of these kingdoms!

The haughty monarch who dreamt of univerfal monarchy in the last century, could scarcely have expressed himself in more insolent terms to the petty Princes furrounding his dominions, than the Congress have done to the powerful Empire to which they owe the allegiance of fubjects. allowance ought to be made for THEIR ignorance, and a great deal for the petulance of men new to confequence and authority; but, even in that case, the insolence of the Declaration is calculated to raife indignation, as well as contempt. The Congress, however, are only the echoes of a defperate Faction in this Kingdom, who have uniformly, in their public exhibitions, degraded the strength, power, and authority of Great-Britain, to exalt America on the ruins. With an effrontery without example in any other age or nation, THESE MEN affume the name of Patriots, yet lay the honour, dignity, and reputation of their Country under the feet of her rebellious subjects. With

With a peculiar refinement on Parricide, they bind the hands of the MOTHER, while they plant a dagger in those of the DAUGHTER, to stab her to the heart; and, to finish the horrid picture, they smile at the mischief they have done, and look round to the spectators for applause.

It appears, upon the whole, that the Declaration, which ought to contain all the argument in favour of the Americans, contains, in fact, nothing that does not militate against their cause. The right of taxing all the subjects of the Empire, for the general support of the State, is a part of that Supremacy which the first principles of the Constitution have vested in the British Le-This Supremacy has been exerted by gislature. Parliament, and admitted by the Americans, ever fincetheir ancestors migrated from these kingdoms. If they now deny it, by that very act they cease to be subjects, and become rebels. But granting, for the fake of argument, that Taxation is no part of the supremacy of Parliament, the very conduct of the Americans not only justifies, but even renders it absolutely necessary, that a precedent should be They own, "that their internal refour-" ces are great." The inability of contributing to the necessities of a State, from whom they have derived their origin, their fupport, their protection, tion, and their prosperity, is no longer a pretence; and if they will give no Revenue as subjects, they owe a debt as allies. They affect to maintain armies by land; they threaten to send sleets to sea; they alledge, that their resources are capable of supporting a rebellion against the Mother-Country; yet they justify that rebellion by the demand made by the Mother-Country, for their bearing a part of their own future expences.

That the FORMER expences of America have drawn from Great-Britain an incredible treasure, may be seen from the following authentic estimate. We shall begin this estimate with the accession of the House of Hanover to the Throne of these Kingdoms.

To this amazing fum might be added, by implication, the other expences of the two last Wars. The FORMER of those wars was undertaken for the protection of the American Commerce, or rather American smuggling, to the Spanish Colonies. We entered into the LATTER for the defence of the Colonists; we carried it on for their fecurity; and terminated it for their SOLE advantage. The two last Wars have cost this Country, at a moderate computation, ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLIONS. To this extraordinary waste of treasure, what have the Colonies to oppose to balance the account? Is it a languid Commerce, which fcarcely makes its returns once in three years?

We have heard much (indeed, a great deal too much) of this Commerce from factious men on both both fides of the Atlantic. This is the mighty engine which they wield over the heads of the ignorant; the great bugbear with which they terrify the timid. To estimate the value of the American trade with any degree of precision, is impossible. The accounts kept in the Custom-house are no authorities. When exports pay no duty, a door is opened to false entries. The vanity of fome Merchants, the interest of others, too frequently induce them to magnify, beyond measure, the quantity of their export trade. Besides, the mercantile abettors of American resistance thought they ferved the Colonies, whilft they gratified their own private views. We may conclude, that the Commerce with North America has been greatly over-rated, as the TOTAL LOSS of it has NOT affected this Kingdom. We ought, perhaps, to ascribe to its insignificance what we are taught to attribute to an INCREASE in other channels of trade.

Like all monopolies, the Commerce with North-America, such as it has been, was much more profitable to the Merchant, than advantageous to the Manufacturer. One-third of this commerce with any State in Europe (from which the returns are annual) would have brought equal profit to the manufacturer, and would have enabled him to employ an equal number of hands. Political impostors will not fail to advance magnificent sictions on this head, and the ignorant cannot cease to give them credit. On a subject where proofs are so difficult to be obtained, one may hazard a conjecture. The money expended by this Nation upon America, for the protection of her inhabitants and the encouragement of her Commerce, would have been more than sufficient to purchase all the manufactures ever exported from Great-Britain to the Colonies now in rebellion. I mean not to include, in this conjectural estimate, any sums expended by us in any other part of the world during the two last (truly American) Wars.

The Americans, with a degree of folly scarce excuseable in the most consummate ignorance, claim a merit with Great-Britain, for the Revenue arising from imposts laid upon some of their commodities, in this Kingdom. The chief of these are Rice and Tobacco. The Revenue arising from Rice is so insignificant that it scarce deserves to be mentioned. It never amounted, at the highest computation, to ten thousand pounds in any one year. Tobacco, when re-exported, pays no duty; and it is a matter of great doubt, whether the frauds committed in the drawbacks may not nearly balance the oftensible Revenue arising to the State from the home consumption.

But, granting a great Revenue should arise from Rice and Tobacco to the State, what favour do we owe to our Colonies on that head? That Revenue is paid by ourselves. The Tax is on the Consumer, and not upon the Planter. Should Siberia supply us with Rice and Tobacco, the price would not probably be greater to the Consumer, nor the Revenue less to the State. If the Americans claim any merit from those Taxes, what do we not owe to the Emperor of China? The Revenue from Tea is much more considerable than that from Rice and Tobacco. A Congress at Pekin might accuse us of ingratitude on this subject, with as much justice as the Assembly lately sitting at Philadelphia.

It is evident, from the above state of facts, that the Colonies have no claim to an exemption from Taxation, on account of any advantage that has accrued to this country from their commerce. But Taxation has now ceased to be any part of the dispute. It goes to the whole authority of the Mother-Country. The Americans offer no longer the very name of Obedience. But why should I speak of Obedience? This very Congress, whose Declaration is the subject of this disquisition, have passed a Vote of Independence. They have formed the plan of a Republican Government in their secret Councils. They have fent circular copies of that plan to all the Provinces, for the approbation of their Constituents. They have long acted as rebels, they now affect to contend as enemies. Their abettors in this Kingdom are no strangers to their extravagant designs; yet, with pernicious effrontery, they avowedly desert the interest, supremacy and glory of their Country, and dignify the soulest rebelsion with the title of a glorious struggle for freedom."

No

whose

The Independence which they now openly affert, has been all along the object of the leaders of the infatuated Colonists. Ambitious Demagogues have led forward an ignorant Populace, step by ftep,

step, till their retreat from ruin is difficult, if not impossible. To cover their own designs, the Congress affected, even so late as the month of July last, to offer conditions (too humiliating indeed to be accepted), as grounds for a reconciliation with the Mother-Country. They voted a Petition to the King, which was presented to His Majesty on the first of September. But inadmissible as the terms of the Petition were, the Congress were unwilling to trust the fate of their favourite Independence to the infolence of their own demands. When they pretended to folicit the Throne for Peace, they endeavoured to make the breach between the Mother-Country and America irreparable, by pushing with vigour their rebellious war.

The Petition was the last Act of the Congress, before their adjournment on the second of August. After this adjournment, and BEFORE they could possibly hear of the reception of their Petition, St. John's was besieged; an attempt was made on Montreal; a party under Arnold invaded Canada, by the way of Kennebec; and the fort of Bermuda was robbed of its gun-powder on the 14th of August. On the 13th of the same month the boat of the Asia Man of War was burnt at New-

New-York; a vessel bringing provisions to that ship shared the same fate on the 5th of September. Two ships were seized to the southward, in the month of August, by vessels sitted out in South-Carolina. In the first week of October Mr. Washington issued commissions to masters of armed vessels to cruize on the ships of Great-Britain, as against a foreign enemy. In the month of November, before any Bill of the same kind was brought into the British Parliament, the Provincial Conventions of the Northern Colonies passed pretended Acts, forbidding, under pain of death, every correspondence with the People of Great-Britain; and appointing Judges in the various ports, for the condemnation of British captures.

Such is the conduct of the Americans, to which that of Great-Britain has all along formed a striking contrast. With the indulgence and patience of a Parent, she soothed, flattered, and even courted them to a reconciliation. In pity to the weakness, in condescension to the folly, in consideration to the prejudices of a froward child, she held out the olive-branch, when she ought, perhaps, to have stretched forth the rod of correction. Her pity, her kindness, and affection, were lost upon the Americans. They advanced rapidly from claim to claim, and construed her forbearance forbearance into timidity. Each Act that was repealed furnished a subject for triumph, and not an object for gratitude. Each concession became the foundation of some new demand, till, at length, by assuming all to themselves by rebellion, they left the Mother-Country nothing to bestow.

In this fituation of affairs, Great-Britain must purfue one of two lines of conduct, with regard to her refractory Colonies. She must either put up with the loss of ALL her expence, and emancipate them for ever, or reduce them to that state of dependence which subjects owe to the supreme authority in every Empire. As the latter line must of necessity be purfued, it ought to be purfued with a mixture of spirit and prudence. To be in every respect in a condition to force equitable terms, is the best security for their being voluntarily offered. But should terms be offered by the rebels, the RIGHTS of THIS COUNTRY must be more regarded in the accommodation, than the CLAIMS of AMERICA. To permit the Colonies to GAIN by one rebellion, is to fow the feeds of another. But if the Colonies, as communities, are not permitted to gain by their refractory conduct, I am far from wishing that individuals should lose any part of their rights as British subjects.

To propose a plan to the Americans, in their present political frenzy, would be to speak to the winds. To make them less free than the other fubjects of the State, can never be the design of this Country. To obtain greater privileges, can scarcely be their own defign. If they are not madly bent on independence, let them propose the conditions on which they wish to continue fubjects. But if they are to continue fubjects, they must perform their duty as such, and contribute toward the expence of the State, for the general protection. The Legislature of this Kingdom cannot poffibly relinquish any part of its fupremacy over the Colonies; but it is in the power of the Colonies to share in that supremacy. If they complain of being taxed without having the privilege of fending Members to Parliament, let them be represented. Nay, more: Let their Representation increase in proportion to the Revenue they shall furnish. If they wish rather to vote their quota towards the general fupply, through their own General Courts and Assemblies, the resolution of Parliament on that subject is still open to their choice.

But as long as they assume the language of a Sovereign State, this Kingdom can enter into no negociation, can meet no compromise. Nations, as well as individuals, have a character, a certain dignity, which they must preserve at the risque of their existence. Great-Britain has obeyed the dictates of humanity beyond the limits prescribed by her reputation. To tempt her further, is full of peril, as her indignation begins to rife. She has long had reason to complain of American ingratitude; and she will not bear longer with American injustice. The dangerous refentment of a great people is ready to burst forth. They already begin to ask, with vehemence, Is this the return we ought to expect from Colonies, whom with parental indulgence we have cherished in infancy, protected in youth, and reared to manhood? Have we spent in their cause so much treasure, and have they the ingratitude to refuse to bear a small portion of our burdens? Have we spilt so much of the blood of their enemies, and do they repay us by imbruing their hands in our own? The law of God and of Nature is on the fide of an indulgent Parent against an undutiful Child; and should necessary correction render him incapable of future offence, he has only his own obstinacy and folly to blame.

REPRESENTATIVES

UNITED COLONIES OF NORTH AMERICA.

NOW MET IN

GENERAL CONGRESS AT PHILADELPHIA,

SETTING FORTH

THE CAUSES AND NECESSITY OF THEIR TAKING UP ARMS.

If it was possible for men who exercise their reason to believe, that the Divine Author of our existence intended a part of the human race to hold an absolute property in, and an unbounded power over others, marked out by his infinite goodness and wisdom as the objects of a legal domination, never rightfully resistible, however severe and oppressive; the inhabitants of these Colonies might at least require from the Parliament of Great Britain some evidence, that this dreadful authority over them has been granted to that body. But a reverence for our Great Creator, principles of humanity, and the dictates of common sense, must convince all those who restect upon the subject, that Government was instituted to promote the welfare of mankind, and ought to be administered for the attainment of that end. The Legislature flature of Great Britain, however, stimulated by an inordinate passion for a power not only unjustifiable, but which they know to be peculiarly reprobated by the very constitution of that Kingdom, and desperate of success in any mode of contest, where regard should be had to truth, law, or right, have at length, deserting those, attempted to effect their cruel and impolitic purpose of enslaving these Colonies by violence, and have thereby rendered it necessary for us to close with their last appeal from reason to arms.—Yet, however blinded that Assembly may be, by their intemperate rage for unlimited domination, so to slight justice and the opinion of mankind, we esteem ourselves bound by obligations of respect to the rest of the world, to make known the justice of our cause.

Our forefathers, inhabitants of the island of Great Britain, left their native land, to feek on these shores a refidence for civil and religious freedom. At the expence of their blood, at the hazard of their fortunes, without the least charge to the country from which they removed, by unceasing labour, and an unconquerable spirit, they effected settlements in the distant and inhospitable wilds of America, then filled with numerous and warlike nations of barbarians. Societies or governments, vested with perfect legislatures, were formed under Charters from the Crown, and an harmonious intercourse was established between the Colonies and the Kingdom from which they derived their origin. The mutual benefits of this union became in a short time so extraordinary, as to excite aftonishment, It is univerfally confessed, that the amazing increase of the wealth, strength, and navigation of the realm arose from this fource; and the Minister who so wisely and successfully directed the measures of Great-Britain in the late war, publickly declared, that these Colonies enabled her to triumph over her enemies .- Towards the conclusion of that war it pleased our Sovereign to make a change in his Councils.-From that fatal moment the affairs of the British Empire began to fall into confusion, and gradually fliding from the fummit of glorious prosperity to which they had been advanced by the virtues and abilities of one man, are at length distracted by the convultions convulsions that now shake it to its deepest foundation. The new Ministry finding the brave soes of Britain, though frequently deseated, yet still contending, took up the unfortunate idea of granting them a hasty peace, and of then subduing her faithful friends.

These devoted Colonies were judged to be in such a flate, as to prefent victories without bloodshed, and all the easy emoluments of statuteable plunder. interrupted tenor of their peaceable and respectful behaviour from the beginning of Colonization, their dutiful, zealous, and useful services during the war, tho' so recently and amply acknowledged in the most honourable manner by his Majesty, by the late King, and by Parliament, could not fave them from the meditated Parliament was influenced to adopt the innovations. pernicious project, and assuming a new power over them, have, in the course of eleven years, given such decisive specimens of the spirit and consequences attending this power, as to leave no doubt concerning the effects of acquiescence under it. They have undertaken to give and grant our money without our confent, tho' we have ever exercifed an exclusive right to dispose of our own property. Statutes have been passed for extending the jurisdiction of Courts of Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty beyond their antient limits, for depriving us of the accustomed and inestimable privilege of trial by Jury in cases affecting both life and property; for suspending the Legislature of one of the Colonies; for interdicting all commerce of another; and for altering fundamentally the form of government, established by charter, and secured by Acts of its own Legislature solemnly confirmed by the Crown; for exempting the "Murderers" of Colonists from legal trial, and, in effect, from punishment; for erecting in a neighbouring Province, acquired by the joint arms of Great Britain and America, a despotism dangerous to our very existence; and for quartering foldiers upon the Colonists in time of profound peace. It has also been resolved in Parliament, that Colonists charged with committing certain offences, shall be transported to England to be tried.

But why should we enumerate our injuries in detail? By one Statute it is declared, that Parliament can " of se right make laws to bind us in all cases whatsoever." What is to defend us against so enormous, so unlimited a power? Not a fingle man of those who assume it, is chosen by us, or is subject to our controul or influence; but, on the contrary, they are all of them exempt from the operation of such laws; and an American revenue, if not diverted from the oftenfible purposes for which it is raifed, would actually lighten their own burdens in proportion as they increase ours. We saw the misery to which such despotism would reduce us. We for ten years incessantly and inessedually besieged the Throne as supplicants; we reasoned, we remonstrated with Parliament in the most mild and decent language. But Administration, sensible that we should regard these oppressive measures as freemen ought to do, sent over fleets and armies to enforce them. The indignation of the Americans was roused, it is true; but it was the indignation of a virtuous, loyal, and affectionate people. A Congress of Delegates from the United Colonies was affembled at Philadelphia, on the 5th day of last September. We refolved again to offer an humble and dutiful Petition to the King, and also addressed our fellow-subjects of Great-Britain. We have pursued every temperate, every respectful measure; we have even proceeded to break off our commercial intercourse with our fellowfubjects, as the last peaceable admonition, that our attachment to no nation upon earth should supplant our attachment to liberty. This we flattered ourselves was the ultimate step of the controversy; but the subsequent events have shewn, how vain is this hope of finding moderation in our enemies.

Several threatening expressions against the Colonies were inserted in his Majesty's Speech. Our Petition, though we were told it was a decent one, that his Majesty had been pleased to receive it graciously, and to promise laying it before his Parliament, was huddled into both Houses amongst a bundle of American papers, and there neglected. The Lords and Commons in their Address, in the month of February, said, That "a rest bellion at that time actually existed within the Pro"vince of Massachuset's Bay; and that those concerned in it had been countenanced and encouraged by unlawful combinations and engagements, entered into by his Majesty's subjects in several of the other Colonies; and therefore they befought his Majesty, that he would take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the Supreme Legislature." Soon after the commercial intercourse of whole Colonies, with foreign countries, and with each other, was cut off by an Act of Parliament; by another, several of them were entirely prohibited from the sisheries in the seas near their coasts, on which they always depended for their sustenance;

and large reinforcements of ships and troops were immediately sent over to General Gage.

Fruitless were all the entreaties, arguments and eloquence of an illustrious band of the most distinguished Peers and Commoners, who nobly and strenuously afferted the justice of our cause, to stay or even to mitigate the heedless fury with which these accumulated and unexampled outrages were hurried on. Equally fruitless was the interference of the City of London, of Bristol, and many other respectable towns, in our favour. Parliament adopted an infidious manœuvre, calculated to divide us, to establish a perpetual auction of taxations, where Colony should bid against Colony, all of them uninformed what ranfom should redeem their lives; and thus to extort from us, at the point of the bayonet, the unknown fums that should be sufficient to gratify, if possible to gratify, Ministerial rapacity, with the miserable indulgence left to us of raising in our own mode the prescribed tribute. What terms more rigid and humiliating could have been dictated by remorfeless victors to conquered enemies? In our circumstances, to accept them would be to deferve them.

Soon after the intelligence of these proceedings arrived on this Continent, General Gage, who in the course of the last year had taken pussession of the town of Boston, in the province of Massachuset's-Bay, and still occupied it as a garrison, on the 19th day of April sent out from that place a large detachment of his army, who made an P 2 unprovoked unprovoked affault on the inhabitants of the faid province. at the town of Lexington, as appears by the affidavits of a great number of persons, some of whom were officers and foldiers of that detachment, murdered eight of the inhabitants, and wounded many others. From thence the troops proceeded in warlike array to the town of Concord, where they fet upon another party of the inhabitants of the same Province, killing several, and wounding more, until compelled to retreat by the country people fuddenly affembled to repel this cruel aggreffion. Hostilities thus commenced by the British troops, have been fince profecuted by them without regard to faith or reputation. The inhabitants of Boston being confined within that town by the General their Governor, and having in order to procure their dismission entered into a treaty with him, it was stipulated that the said inhabitants, having deposited their arms with their own Magistrates, should have liberty to depart, taking with them their other effects. They accordingly delivered up their arms; but in open violation of honour, in defiance of the obligation of treaties, which even favage nations esteem sacred, the Governor ordered the arms deposited as aforesaid, that they might be preserved for their owners, to be seized by a body of soldiers; detained the greatest part of the inhabitants in the town. and compelled the few who were permitted to retire, to leave their most valuable effects behind.

By this perfidy wives are separated from their hufbands, children from their parents, the aged and fick from their relations and friends, who wish to attend and comfort them; and those who have been used to live in plenty, and even elegance, are reduced to deplorable distress.

The General, further emulating his Ministerial masters, by a proclamation, bearing date on the 12th day of June, after venting the grossest falsehoods and calumnies against the good people of these Colonies, proceeds to "declare them all, either by name or description, to be rebels and traitors, to supersede the course of the common law, and instead thereof to publish and order the use and exercise of the law martial."——His troops troops have butchered our countrymen; have wantonly burnt Charles Town, besides a considerable number of houses in other places; our ships and vessels are seized; the necessary supplies of provisions are intercepted, and he is exerting his utmost power to spread destruction and devastation around him.

We have received certain intelligence, that General Carleton, the Governor of Canada, is infligating the people of that Province and the Indians to fall upon us; and we have but too much reason to apprehend, that schemes have been formed to excite domestic enemies against us. In brief, a part of these Colonies now feels, and all of them are fure of feeling, as far as the vengeance of Administration can inflict them, the complicated cala-mities of fire, sword and famine. We are reduced to the alternative of chufing an unconditional submission to the tyranny of irritated Ministers, or resistance by force. The latter is our choice. We have counted the cost of this contest, and find nothing so dreadful as voluntary flavery. Honour, justice and humanity, forbid us tamely to furrender that freedom which we received from our gallant ancestors, and which our innocent posterity have a right to receive from us. We cannot endure the infamy and guilt of refigning fucceeding generations to that wretchedness which inevitably awaits them, if we basely entail hereditary bondage upon them.

Our cause is just: our union is perfect: our internal resources are great, and if necessary, foreign assistance is undoubtedly attainable. We gratefully acknowledge, as signal instances of Divine savour towards us, that his Providence would not permit us to be called into this severe controversy, until we were grown up to our present strength, had been previously exercised in warlike operations, and possessed of the means of defending ourselves. With hearts fortisted with these animating reflections, we most solemnly before God and the world declare, that, exerting the utmost energy of those powers which our beneficent Creator hath graciously bestowed upon us, the arms we have been compelled by our enemies to assume, we will, in designee of every hazard, with unabating firmness and perseverance, employ for the preservation of our liberties, being with one mind resolved to die freemen rather than to live slaves.

Lest this Declaration should disquiet the minds of our friends and sellow-subjects in any part of the empire, we assure them, that we mean not to dissolve that union which has so long and so happily subsisted between us, and which we sincerely wish to see restored. Necessity has not yet driven us into that desperate measure, or induced us to excite any other nation to war against them. We have not raised armies with ambitious designs of separating from Great Britain, and establishing independent states. We sight not for glory or for conquest. We exhibit to mankind the remarkable speciacle of a people attacked by unprovoked enemies, without any imputation, or even suspicion of offence. They boast of their privileges and civilization, and yet proffer no milder conditions than servitude or death.

In our own native land, in defence of the freedom that is our birthright, and which we ever enjoyed till the late violation of it; for the protection of our property, acquired folely by the honest industry of our forefathers and ourselves, against violence actually offered, we have taken up arms. We shall lay them down when hostilities shall cease on the part of the aggressors, and all danger of their being renewed shall be removed—and not before.

With an humble confidence in the mercies of the Supreme and Impartial Judge and Ruler of the Universe, we most devoutly implore his divine goodness to conduct us happily through this great conslict, to dispose our adversaries to reconciliation on reasonable terms, and thereby to relieve the Empire from the calamities of civil war.

By Order of CONGRESS,

JOHN HANCOCK, PRESIDENT.

CHARLES THOMPSON, SECRETARY.

Pamphlet, the following Articles came to the hands of the Author. If any additional proof was necessary to establish the justness of his observations on the REAL DESIGNS of the Americans, he apprehends it is furnished by this Paper. The Reader is requested to compare the concluding Article, with the late speeches of a certain "Illustrious Band," in both Houses of Parliament.

ARTICLE I.

THE name of this Confederacy shall henceforth be, The United Colonies of North America.

The United Colonies hereby feverally enter into a firm League of Friendship with each other, binding on themselves and their posterity, for their common defence against their enemies, for the security of their liberties and properties, the safety fafety of their persons and families, and their mutual and general welfare.

III.

That each Colony shall enjoy and retain as much as it may think fit of its own present laws, customs, rights, privileges, and peculiar jurisdictions, within its own limits; and may amend its own constitution, as shall seem best to its own Assembly or Convention.

IV.

That for the more convenient management of general interests, Delegates shall be elected annually in each Colony, to meet in General Congress, at such time and place as shall be agreed on in the next preceding Congress. Only where particular circumstances do not make a deviation necessary, it is understood to be z rule, That each succeeding Congress is to be held in a different Colony, till the whole number be gone through, and so in perpetual rotation; and that accordingly, the next Congress after the present shall be held at Annapolis, in Maryland.

V.

That the power and duty of the Congress shall extend to the determining on war and peace, the entering into alliances, the reconciliation with Great Britain, settling all disputes between Colony and Colony, if any should arise, and the planting new Colonies where proper. The Congress shall also make such general ordinances as thought to be necessary for the general welfare, which particular assemblies cannot be competent, but those that may relate to our general commerce or general currency, to the establishment of posts, the regulation of our common forces: the Congress shall also have the appointment of all Officers civil and military, appertaining to the General Confederacy, such as General Treasurer, Secretary, &c. &c. &c.

VI.

All charges of wars, and all other general expences to be incurred for the common welfare, shall be defrayed out of a common treasury, which is to be supplied by each Colony, in proportion to its number of male polls between 16 and 60 years of age: the taxes for paying that proportion are to be laid and levied by the laws of each Colony.

VII.

The number of Delegates to be elected, and fent to the Congress by cath Colony, shall be regulated, from time to time, time, by the number of fuch polls returned; fo as that one Delegate be allowed for every 5000 polls. And the Delegates are to bring with them to every Congress, an authenticated return of the number of polls in their respective Colonies, which is to be taken for the purposes above-mentioned.

The boundaries and lands of all the other Indians shall also be ascertained and secured to them in the same manner; and persons appointed to reside among them in proper Districts, who shall take care to prevent injustice in the trade with them; and be enabled at our general expence, by occasional small supplies, to relieve their personal wants and distresses; and all purchases from them shall be by the Congress, for the general advantage and benefit of the United Colonies.

XII.

As all new institutions may have imperfections, which only time and experience can discover, it is agreed, that the General Congress, from time to time, shall propose such amendments of this constitution as may be found necessary, which being approved by a majority of the Colony Assemblies, shall be equally binding with the rest of the Articles of this Confederation.

XIII.

Any and every Colony from Great Britain upon the Continent of North America, not at present engaged in our Association, may, upon application and joining the said Association, be received into the Confederation, viz. Quebec, St. John's, Nova Scotia, Bermudas, and the East and West Florida's, and shall thereupon be entitled to all the advantages of our union, mutual assistance, and commerce.

These Articles shall be proposed to the several Provincial Conventions or Assemblies, to be by them considered; and, if approved, they are advised to empower their Delegates to agree and ratify the same in the ensuing Congress; after which the union thereby established is to continue firm, till the terms of reconciliation proposed in the Petition of the last Congress to the King are agreed to; till the Acts, since made, restraining the American commerce and sisheries, are repealed; till reparation is made for the injury done to Boston by shutting up its ports; for burning Charlestown, and for the expence of this unjust war; and till all the British troops are withdrawn from America. On the arrival of these events, the Colonies are to return to their former connections and friendship with Great Britain; but on failure thereof, this Confederation is to be perpetual.

WHEREAS it hath pleased God to bless these Countries with a most plentiful harvest, whereby much corn and other provisions can be spared to foreign Nations who may want the same:

Resolved, That, after the expiration of six months from the 20th July instant, being the day appointed by a late Act of Parliament of Great Britain, for restraining the Trade of the Confederate Colonies, all Custom Houses therein (if the said Act be not first repealed) shall be shut up, and all the officers of the same discharged from the execution of their several functions; and declared to be thenceforth open to the ships of every State in Europe that will admit our commerce, and protect it; who may bring in and expose to sale, free of all duties, their respective produce and manufactures, and every kind of merchandise, excepting Teas, and the merchandise of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British West India Islands.

Refolved, That we will, to the utmost of our power, maintain and support this freedom of commerce for two years certain after its commencement, any reconciliation between us and Great-Britain notwithstanding, and as much longer beyond that term as the late Acts of Parliament for restraining the commerce and sisteries, and disallowing the laws and charters of any of the Colonies, shall continue unrepealed.

REFUTATION

DOCTOR PRICE's STATE of the NATIONAL DEBT.

THE contest between Great-Britain and her Colonies has produced, among other evils, a deluge of speculative publications, calculated to bewilder the weak, and to impose upon the ignorant. Several Writers, either biassed by party or swayed by vanity, have enlisted themselves under the banners of rebellion, and, with a strange perversion of argument, attempt to justify the conduct of the Colonists, upon the principles of reason and civil liberty. Having formed, in their distempered imaginations, some wild theories of polity, they presume to judge of the degree of freedom in Government, in proportion to its departure from their own inadmissible maxims.

Of these fanciful abettors of American resistance, the latest and the most violent is Dr. PRICE, who has given to the Public a Pamphlet, which HE calls " Observations on the Nature of Civil " Liberty, the Principles of Government, and the " Justice and Policy of the American War." These OBSERVATIONS, where they are merely speculative, may be fafely trusted to the common fense of mankind, without any reply. It is sufficient here to remark, that the NATURE of the Doctor's CIVIL liberty is too UNNATURAL to have ever existed in any civil society whatsoever; that his PRINCIPLES of Government are too visionary even for theory, and, therefore, utterly incompatible with practice; that, inflead of finding either juftice or policy in the American war, he invites Great-Britain to be aiding and abetting to the scheme of American Independence; and all this, that the Doctor himself, and his Party, may have a place to "FLY TO," when corruption and despotism shall overwhelm this devoted Kingdom.

To shew that the RUIN of the Kingdom and the consequent flight of the political flect are not distant objects, Dr. Price has furnished the Public with a deplorable STATE of the NATIONAL DEBT, after having done his utmost to "hasten the strides of approaching Bankruptcy," by throwing throwing discredit on Paper-currency and the Bank of England. The proofs produced by the Doctor to establish these melancholy facts, are equally conclusive with his arguments. There exists no public freedom in this Kingdom, "be-" cause the People at large" (females as well as males) "do not meet in one general Gouncil, and " determine upon all public measures." Papercurrency deferves no credit, as it " reprefents no-"thing but specie:" This Country should humble herfelf in the dust at the feet of America, and give up all her Rights to her Colonies, "because the "Earl of Shelburne faid fo in the House of "Lords;" and Great-Britain must immediately fink under the intolerable burden of her debts, because Dr. PRICE finds it convenient, for his present purpose, to load her shoulders with many MILLIONS more than she actually owes.

As the state of the National Debt, which this Writer gives in his Pamphlet, may deceive the Public, by assuming the appearance of fact, it may not be improper to expose its fallacy. Dr. Price, by quoting Helm's Paper, which is calculated for the information of the Proprietors of the Stocks, endeavours to encrease the authority of his account. But Helm's Paper has a contrary effect,

Helm.

Helm gives not the debt due from the Public to the three great Companies, but the capital stock on which they divide. The fums payable on their stock cannot, therefore, be the interest paid to them by Government, but is actually the annual dividend paid by each Company. For instance, Government is indebted to the East-India Company f. 4,200,000, for which they receive 3 per cent. interest. They pay 6 per cent. on their stock of f. 3,200,000, and pay 3 per cent. on f. 3,000,000 in annuities created by themfelves. This alone makes the TRIFLING difference in the Doctor's account of Two MILLIONS principal, and f. 156,000 per annum interest. It would have magnified the Doctor's account still more, if he had been pleased to add the amount of the principal and interest of the Company's Bonds.

The Bank also receive 3 per cent. on the debt due to them from Government, and divide 5 ½ per cent. on their capital. The South-Sea Company, who receive 3 per cent. on the debt due from Government, divide 3½ per cent. on their stock. Thus Dr. Price, by taking Helm's Paper for his guide, either through ignorance or design, besides erroneously encreasing the principal, has made

made the amount of the interest on those articles

Had the Doctor consulted proper authorities, (but that was not consistent with the designs of the Party) he would have found, that the principal of the Debt to those Companies, and the capital of the Government Annuities payable by them, amount together to £. 122,963,254; and that the charge to Government for the interest and allowances for management (which last, it is evident, Dr. Price never considered), amount to £. 3,969,204. This sum, notwithstanding the charge for management, is less, by £. 348,666, than the Doctor's charge for interest only.

To pursue Dr. Price through the other parts of his incorrect state of the Revenue and National Debt, where there is a little right and much wrong, and to suppose against his suppositions, would be to combat a shadow. It is, therefore, only necessary to stigmatize the notoriously great errors in his accounts, wherein he affects to be exceedingly well informed, and quotes authorities. His account of the Sinking Fund is erroneous in every article. At the close of his Observations on this head, he affirms, that "the Sinking Fund" Fund

" Fund was taken last year for £. 2,900,000, in-" cluding an extraordinary charge of £. 100,000 " on the aggregate fund. If there has been a de-" ficiency," he adds, " it is a debt contracted " last year, which must be added to other debts " arising from deficiencies in the provisions made " for the expences of last year." But it appears from the accounts laid before Parliament, that, instead of that fund being deficient, it produced a furplus of f. 17,000. With regard to the present state of the Sinking Fund, it actually produced a furplus of f. 106,629, in the year ended the 5th of January 1776, more than in the year. ended the 5th of January 1775; notwithstanding £. 100,000 has been applied out of the public revenue, in pursuance of an Act of the last Session of Parliament, for the purchase of Somerset-House, for the use of the Public.

In his state of the profit of the Lotteries, Dr. Price is mistaken upwards of £.420,000. The Doctor takes the profit of nine years at £.150,000 each year. But there were only six profitable Lotteries, and only three of those produced a profit of £.150,000 each; all the former Lotteries, except those six, having been attended with Annuities.

In a note which Dr. Price has placed at the bottom of page 120 of his Pamphlet, he fays, by a reference to an account of unappropriated revenues, amounting to £.4,460,759: That "the greatest part of this revenue is borrowed " of the Bank, and spent before it comes into "the Exchequer. It is, therefore, in reality, " fo much debt constantly due to the Bank, " for which interest is paid." The real fact is, that the Bank, in 1775, lent only on the credit of the land-tax and malt duties, which together amounted to f.2,250,000. Here the difference is no more than f.2,210,759, which in Dr. Price's idea may, perhaps, be efteemed an IM-MATERIAL error.—The Doctor having thus been detected in fuch glaring errors, with regard to matters which he advances as FACTS, we may fafely trust his suppositions to the judgment of the impartial Public.

Since the Publication of the SIXTH EDITION, in which the REFUTATION made its first appearance, Dr. PRICE has acknowledged his errors, and accommodated his account of the NATIONAL DEBT to the corrections stated above. He, however, complains plaints of the asperity of a Writer, from whom, he owns, he derived information. That Writer cannot persuade himself that he advanced any thing personal against Dr. Price; though, as a friend to This Country, he could give no quarter to the dangerous principles propagated by the Doctor, with such vehemence and zeal, in favour of America.

folierd to adirect to a

As fome amends for the alledged feverity, Dr. Price has full liberty to pay his court to "the " great Minister who directs our finances," at the expence of the "ability," and even the "can-"dour" of the Author of the Refutation. If the wind begins to change, the Doctor may steer his course into that " haven of rest," and avail himfelf of the just reward of panegyric, without exciting envy, or provoking moleftation. In the line of information and emolument, the Writer of the Refutation could at no period have flood in his way; for he affures the Public, that he has neither been honoured with communications, nor animated with encouragements from the noble Lord, whose "ability and candour" have made fuch deep impressions on Dr. Price's mind.

But though the Writer of the Refutation pretends not to derive his authorities from fuch an "exalted fource," he prefumes he is much better informed than his Opponent, on the REAL state of the national incumbrance. To that ingenuity of calculation which pleases when it deceives, he has never laid any claim. On a subject of such importance as the debt of the nation, he has refolved to adhere to FACTS; and to leave the province of Fiction to a Party, who support their little credit with the nation, with political deceptions and ingenious frauds. The apparent harshness of these expressions is not meant to apply to Dr. Price, whose character as a Man, would induce one to believe, that, as a Writer, he himself is deceived by the specious professions of Faction.

To remove, in some measure, the deception, which, it is to be hoped, was innocently put upon the world by the Doctor, was the primary object of the first part of this Resutation; and, as he has availed himself of the information, the sollowing more particular state is recommended to him for his next Edition:

In his state of the unfunded debt, the Doctor (by chance, perhaps, more than information) is nearly right. But he is no less than between seven and eight millions wrong, in the total of the national debt, on the 5th of January 1775. With regard to the extraneous sums employed in paying off the National Debt, since the 5th of January 1763, Dr. Price is mistaken in almost every article. His errors, in this respect, make a difference of more than three millions, in the sum discharged by those extraneous sunds; and he consequently under-rates, by more than £. 300,000 per annum, the surplus of the ordinary revenue, for the space of twelve years.

Dr. Price, founding his calculations on fallacious grounds, afferts, that only £. 238,000 per annum, can be spared out of the revenue, towards the discharging of the National Incumbrance +. The truth is, that the Sinking Fund has been so much augmented since the last Peace, by the interest of the debts paid off, by the annuities for lives fallen in, and by an increase of commerce, and, perhaps, of luxury, that had not the Doctor's American friends disturbed the public repose, a Million might be annually spared towards the discharge of the public debt.

Though Dr. Price has thought proper to AMEND his account of the NATIONAL DEBT, with the state first given in this REFUTATION, he affirms that " nothing depends on this omission, nor " does it affect the conclusion, with a view to " which he has chosen to state the National " Debt +." The Doctor might as well have faid, "I am resolved that this Country shall be RUIN-" ED by her debt; and though I own myself " wrong in particular fums, the general amount " must still remain the same." This behaviour is exactly like that of a tradefman, who after having been accused of overcharging, withdraws his account, and reduces the prices complained of; but, at the same time, lays the deficiency on other articles of the fame account.

⁺ Price's Pamphlet, P. 112.

With regard to the Annuities, the value of which the Doctor calculates with fuch an appearance of accuracy, it may be fafely affirmed that he is wrong, in almost every circumstance. But as it is not incumbent on the Writer of the Refutation to give every information to his Opponents. he declines, for the present, to put the Doctor right on that head. His calculations, had even his facts been just, are liable to various objections. For instance, at the time of the creation of the Annuities, Government was obliged to give an extraordinary interest, on raising the public supplies; part of which was by a redeemable, and the other part an irredeemable charge. As no money, therefore, was paid specifically for those Annuities, the public was not incumbered with an additional principal. Should that be admitted, 1 per Cent. on the confolidated 4 per Cent. Annuities and i per Cent. on those at 31 per Cent. ought also to be valued for the time they are to continue at that rate; and their prefent value to be added to the Principal of the National Debt.

Since Dr. Price published his STATE of the NATIONAL DEBT, he has acquired a noble auxiliary in the cause of America, in the person of the EARL OF STAIR. His Lordship has also printed a very melancholy melancholy state of the public incumbrance. As ruin denounced from so high a place may, perhaps, make some impression, it is but justice to the Nation to assure them, that the whole is a salse alarm. Terrified at the enormity of his own Account, the Earl of Stair seels much for a kingdom destined to inevitable Ruin. To put an end to his Lordship's sears, as well as to the apprehensions of others, if any apprehensions have arisen from his Pamphlet, it is necessary to inform the Public, That the Noble Lord is wrong in every article of his State of the National Debt. Men, who affect to love their Country, should treat with tenderness her very fears; and take care to be certain with regard to sacts, before they prophesy her ruin.

Had this certainty been acquired by the Earl of Stair, the world would have been deprived of the pathetic eloquence, with which his Lordship mourns over the fall of this devoted Kingdom. Having culled the choicest flowers of our most celebrated Poets, the noble Writer strews them, with profusion, on the bier of departed public credit. But when one hand is employed in this melancholy office, the other is busy in weaving a wreath for the brow of "the noble Lord who is at the head

"head of the Finance Department." Though his Lordship, like his predecessors in office, has the missortune to be the "licensed Plunderer of "the State," he has so much "English candour, "English humour, English good-nature," (and perhaps English places in his disposal) that flesh "and blood cannot withstand his allurements." The writers of Opposition, "stern though "they are," are incapable of withholding their poor honest praise;" yet some men may be ungenerous enough to ascribe their panegyrics on their enemies, to their knowledge of the hopeless state of their Friends.
